A lady with ideas about STEEL

Powder room or bathroom—take your choice—for this bright bathroom serves as both . . .
with beauty and distinction. That's because the lady had the right ideas—about steel.

For instance, her choice of steel wall tile—decorative tile of Weirzin, the electrolytically zinc-coated steel that resists heat, moisture, and rust . . . that forms a lasting bond with its finish . . . protecting the beauty it adds.

Now Dad and the children can splash vigorously in their baths, and she has the bathroom spic and span in a jiffy, converting it to her own private powder room.

What's more, the bathtub is steel, the fixtures are steel—so are the cabinets, counters, mirror frames, and even the lady's vanity chair.

Steel is America's bargain metal—it costs so little and lasts so long. In every room of your home, steel—the foundation of modern living— works for you, your comfort, and your budget.

Exclusively Yours

Many years have gone by since Paul Heinley began the revival of the "Movable Shutter." In this time, the "know-how" which comes from experience, has built the largest manufacturing company of Inside Movable Shutters in the world.

Today, decorator-approved Paul Heinley's Movable Shutters have had the "acid test" of year-'round extreme weather exposure. Actual Heinley installations have withstood the punishment of sunshine, salt spray, wind and rainstorms without destroying their beauty.

Not only do Paul Heinley's Movable Shutters divide rooms, make windows or doors dramatically effective, give privacy, put control of heat, light, and ventilation at your fingertips; but also, they become prized possessions for you to cherish forever.

The Heinley organization maintains complete Consulting, Planning, and Estimating Departments; thereby, assuring you the finest in movable shutters, and the ultimate in service and satisfaction.

"Let our expert design-engineers guide you! Send measurements of openings to be shuttered, and, we in turn will make our recommendations." —Paul Heinley and the French promptly installed a battery on a nearby hill to bombard the city.

The rooms which Beethoven occupied were in a direct line of those shells. On the night of the eleventh of May the cannons opened fire. The people of Vienna herded into cellars and sought safety in any underground refuge. Beethoven went to the house of his brother Carl and during the bombardment sat in the cellar of the house and covered his head with pillows. Perhaps he wanted to save what little hearing he had left from the noisy blasts of the shells. After the night and the better part of the day, the city gave up. The French troops moved in, and there promptly began a condition of living with which we are not unfamiliar. Food, especially bread, became scarce, and what was available went to the black market and was sold at fantastic prices. Metal coins disappeared. Houses and homes were requisitioned. The public gardens were closed. Nobody cared about concerts or music. Whoever had the means left town.

But Beethoven lived in the midst of the occupation and, French soldiers, scarce food and other annoyances notwithstanding, he composed. He kept on composing. Among other work he put the finishing touches to his fifth piano concerto. It must have given him deep concern and sufficient satisfaction to forget what was going on about him.

IT WAS three years later before the concerto was given a full-fledged public performance in Vienna, one at which the composer could judge the impression it made on the public. The Emperor Concerto was as out of place at that occasion as would be the recital of "To be or not be" at a baseball game. The performance was a philanthropic affair, a benefit given by the "Society of Noble Ladies for Charity." The chief entertainment was a series of living tableaux, no doubt with the noble ladies beautifully attired and elegantly posed. The tableaux represented three famous paintings. You can imagine what it was like and what happened when, after resounding applause by the friends of the ladies and by the friends of the friends of the ladies, the new, overpowering music began to sound. Czerny (whom your child will remember with unkindly feelings as the writer of the finger exercises for the piano) played the concerto. He played well but, according to a contemporary witness, "the pictures offered a glorious treat, a new piano concerto by Beethoven failed."

There is nothing of royal aloofness in the concerto. Piano and orchestra are given equal prominence. At the very beginning one must sit up and take notice. One chord by the orchestra and the piano sweeps in, ranging from the low to the high of the keyboard. It is as if a genius were taking a deep breath.

The chief melody of the first movement is one which is bandied about by piano and orchestra and which is charming without being weak, beautiful without being sweet. The movement is very long, with a rich and continuously interesting development of the themes.

BUT it is the second movement, the slow movement, which brings us the supreme thrill of the concerto. It represents one of the most extraordinary contemplations in music, hushed, unearthly, inward, living a life below the surface. This interplay of voices, this dialogue of solo instrument and orchestra, is no longer earthbound. The stars are speaking with the moon. Beethoven seems reluctant to finish this conversation. The transition to the rondo which follows testifies to that: it is gradual and hesitating. The final rondo, while not on a plane with the preceding two movements, is endearing because of its bravura gaiety. It ends in the accepted manner, piano and orchestra finishing the chase together.

What incomparable music! How spacious, rich and significant it is! In that sense the title fits. This is one Emperor not likely to abdicate.

Pearly-toned carpet

DECORATOR'S DIARY

An armchair trip through the home furnishings markets via the pages of a decorator's notebook in which the news is underlined

Racked my brains for nights trying to think of an elegant floor covering that would do justice to the Lawlor's new Far Eastern furniture. Rush squares, carved chenille, a Chinese rug—all logical and all so tiresomely obvious. In despair one morning I took to wandering in a half-conscious daze through the carpet showrooms in the Textile Building and drifted into James Lees and Sons. Then I saw "Iridescent." It was the pearly coloring that made me take notice, specifically the combination they call "Ivory Tweed"—dark and light grays, beige and ivory white. Kind of thing you usually find only in custom-order, handwoven rugs.

Waiting now for a job where I can use my other find at Lees—"Chandelle," a slightly shaggy loop texture that comes in black and white and even more gratifying, teak-brown and white.

If I hadn't been caught in that cloudburst I might never have come upon the sundial clock, which only goes to show that silver-lining prophets know what they're talking about.

It started to sprinkle when I was coming out of Amster Yard and by the time I got to Third Avenue it was teeming. After a few frenzied attempts to hail a cab, I backed into the nearest doorway. But even the doorway wasn't much of a refuge, so I backed on into the shop. Then, turning around, I began to feel very foolish indeed. It was a small shop, and standing there facing me was the proprietor with an inquiring look on his face, as if he hadn't noticed the heavens were falling outside and wouldn't in any case feel called upon to shelter every Third Avenue pedestrian who happened to think it desirable to come in out of the rain. I looked around frantically—and was saved by the clock. That, without any further question, was what I had come for.

It was a big flat wall clock of wood, topped by a beaming fat-faced sun and two perky cocks—altogether delightful. Hand carved, the man said, and fitted with a Swiss self-winding movement. The wide beveled frame was finished in antique brick red and the carving in gold leaf. About 30 inches high over all. Might have been French in origin, or maybe descended from American folk art. Forgot to ask because I didn't really care. Didn't forget to get the name of the shop, though—Interiors' Import Co., Inc. Took Mrs. Wallace there next day and she promptly ordered the clock for the foyer of her sleek modern apartment. Two weeks later, Lally Simpson saw the picture of it lying on my desk and now she wants it for her cozy old stone house in Doylestown. Good thing the two ladies have never met. They're each convinced the clock has found its one and only appropriate home.

Indoor sundial

It happens so often that the most appealing thing about a restoration is the thing that is not, strictly speaking, authentic. Thought of that the afternoon I went through the George Eastman birthplace in Rochester. The house was moved there recently from Waterville, N. Y., where Eastman was born in it in 1853, and they say it's the first of the smaller story-and-a-half Greek Revival houses to be restored and opened to the public. Architecturally, it's a doll.

Miss Elizabeth Holahan was responsible for the interiors and a very knowing job she did, I thought. Best of all I liked her wall colors—off-shade pastels, clean, but not in the least wishy-washy. Gave an airy, spacious feeling to those rooms which no doubt were as cluttered as all get-out when George Eastman was toddling about in them. Was almost sorry to hear they will eventually be papered with documentaries, though I know that will make the restoration more authentic and nobody is going to live in it.

The furniture scores high in authenticity as it is, and most of it is characteristically hideous. Even dedicated antiquarians are hard put to say anything good about that ungainly style with the paradoxical label: "American Empire." Philadelphia and New York City craftsmen created a few examples of it you might call passable. But the country cabinetmakers who liked to combine vividly patterned curly maple and rich red cherry in one piece of furniture certainly gave the makers of modern "borax" horrors a garish run for their money.

Strange that during those very same decades the stove makers were turning out, in cast iron, designs of far more grace than anything the furniture makers produced in wood. Thought the stoves were among the prettiest pieces in the Eastman house. Appealing and authentic. No wonder people are beginning to hunt up old stoves and put them to work in lieu of fireplaces!

"What you need is a tiny pattern widely spaced," I said with an omniscient air to Mrs. Beech. That lady is so uncertain about every detail of her life, it takes a tone of unshakable authority to stop her mental quivering.

Well, it was a good idea, I said to myself a few weeks later. That pokey little sitting room would doubtless be much improved by a wallpaper pattern, small in scale but very open in feeling. Now, having thumbed through a dozen sample books crammed with small patterns, all closely spaced, I was beginning to wish I had spoken a shade less authoritatively. Why does the right thing never show up until I've looked at several hundred wrong ones?

The right little wide-spaced pattern showed up finally in the Muralia book. Crisp abstract flowers in several shades of blue with green-gold centers, growing (heaven knows how) from slender black twigs. No name, just a numlear the world's greatest music as you've never heard it before lagnavox brings music into your home with l the fidelity of a master performance in the oncert hall. For a Magnavox is an instru- ient in the truest sense of the word. Without echanical distortion, without the intrusion f unbalanced emphasis—faults of many o-called high-fidelity reproducers—Magna- ox fills your living-room with the whole of e living performance. Whether the music Gilbert & Sullivan or Shostakovich, you ear overtones and timbre never heard before record reproduction.

The new Magnavox "Symphonic Modern," a master high-fidelity instrument combining AM-FM radio with phonograph and tape recorder, has an exceptional audio system that includes two 12-inch low-frequency speakers. These are then coupled, in a cross-over network, with a high-frequency horn speaker, to give you true full-range reproduction.

Twenty watts of undistorted audio power are produced by the high-fidelity amplifier—full power reserve to meet the demands of the most expansive symphonic performance.

And you can play any size record on this new Magnavox automatically. The famous Pianissimo Pick-Up, with dual diamond-sapphire styli, exerts only one-third ounce of tracking pressure to translate even the lowest frequencies.

Call on your Magnavox dealer—his name is in your classified phone book under "Television" or "Radio-Phonograph"—for a thrilling demonstration of the new Magnavox Symphonic Modern. Other Magnavox models for high-fidelity reproduction as low as $99.50. The Magnavox Company, Ft. Wayne 4, Ind.

ber—302 D 302—and very pleasantly priced under two dollars a roll.

Couldn't risk anything tricky in that undersized room, so we stuck to the tried-and-true procedure and covered the loveseat and armchair in plain green-gold linen to match the flower-centers on the wall. Was specially pleased, though, at how well the black tole-tray coffee table and black-lacquered cane-seated chairs brought out the black twigs in the wallpaper pattern, and how graciously the paper returned the compliment.

Never get over being astonished at what you can get away with in furniture placement as long as you have the right piece of furniture. Take the sleek brass-trimmed desk of Macassar ebony and mahogany we found for Mabel Eaton at Charak. Only place she had to put a desk was in a corner against a short stretch of wall between the front and back sections of her two-room living room. It measured only 32 inches from the corner to the frame of the double, doorless doorway between the two rooms. But that didn't faze Mabel even whe I reminded her the Charak des measured 50 inches.

"Let it stick out, then," she said "There's plenty of room to get by." True enough, but I was sure would look like an awkward hulk a thing until I actually saw th piece in place. It was the delicate tapered mahogany legs and slende brass stretcher on the left that cr ated the illusion. That's the en that juts into the doorway, an from the front room it looks lik an exceptionally lightweight pie that wouldn't even block the ey much less threaten the shins. Ten to couple the two rooms more closely together, in fact. Realized later that most single-pedestal desks I've seen have the heavy drawer section on the left instead of the right, which for our purposes wouldn't do at all.

Was a time when I dared broach handwoven fabrics only to a client with so much more money than taste that I feared she'd ruin the finished job with a storeful of expensive atrocities unless I discouraged her with a sky-high bill. That's when I was young and timid. Not long ago I got to thinking how much a beautiful handweave, even a few yards of it, might do to lift a budget room out of the plain-but-inoffensive class. Tried it out with Mrs. Sterling and now I'm convinced.

Picked one of her small pull-up chairs as the candidate for this extra dose of flavor. It had open, wooden arms and a tight seat, so the amount of yardage we needed was reassuringly slight. Took her to Silkar Studios where we looked through Jack Lenor Larsen's samples and came up with a weave I call "Floats" for lack of a better tag. Float is the weavers' term for a loose unanchored yarn lying on the surface of a fabric, and often introduced into a plain weave as embellishment. This was a basket-weave linen with floats of cotton chenille and metallic yarn that looked like little butterflies.

Ordered the fabric in the same colors as the sample—dark blue ground with floats of olive green and light blue chenille and lustrous sapphire "metal." Yardage enough to cover the chair came to less than $50, but it added $500 difference to the looks of the room which was otherwise pleasant but undistinguished with its striped denim and plain linen slipcovers and solid-color twist carpeting, all in greens.

HOW TO LEAVE HOME and like it

By LOUISA M. COMSTOCK

We didn't exactly discover Spain's wonderful Costa Brava (the Carthaginians got there ahead of us), but we feel an air of proprietorship about it because we knew its beaches and fishing villages before many other Americans caught on to its year-round good climate and sunny solitude. Now this blissful, grottoed coast that scallops the Mediterranean from Barcelona to the French border is enjoying something of a boom—and at nice low pre-boom prices. At Lloret de Mar they're still making lace and dancing the sardanas (a sort of Catalonian ring-round-a-rosy), medieval Tossa is as paintable as ever, and the giant pine tree at Santa Cristina continues to shade happy luncheon parties where seafood is the pièce de résistance. The Arts of Daily Living

House Beautiful has created this Exhibition to demonstrate that the art of living is the most beautiful art of all. Our purpose is twofold: to show how the arts may be used in the home and how the home can help you make an art out of living. Above all, the Exhibition demonstrates the richness and variety that distinguishes our modern American ways of living.

The Exhibition in the Fine Arts Building is open from 10 A.M. to 10 P.M. September 17 to October 3

A Room for a Musical Family

The making of your own music is one of the most pleasureable pursuits. And playing with other instrumentalists makes it more enjoyable. This room was designed for such use, as well as to heighten the moods produced by music. Even the lighting of organ, music rack and wall mosaics was engineered both to serve and glamorize.

Rooms for a Lively Life

The 22 rooms that will unfold for you in the next 54 pages were created to show the best in today's living. They are intended to express the philosophy that true culture begins at home, and that as your interests grow and widen your home acquires beauty by reflecting your own expanding life.

This is a collection of rooms that do not relate to each other. Each has its own architecture. Each has real owners who have left their own personal stamp on their room. Each room has utilized the best talents of designer and artist, the best materials for building and furnishing, the best technologies for creating the perfect environment for happy, lively living.

For a Woman who Makes and Collects Fine Embroidery

This room takes its whole character from the occupant's engrossing interest in the art of embroidery. Her finest pieces (which are 18th-century Spanish) are the focal points in the décor, and are echoed in the Spanish window grilles. But the room is still unquestionably modern, using white plastic Naugahyde as upholstery and white vinyl tile as flooring because they can be cleaned in the simplest manner.

The Scandinavian-American Dining Alcove

Satisfying relations between the numerous objects in a room are as important as the beauty of any single object. Assembling furnishings to give this satisfaction is indeed an art. This dining alcove demonstrates several of these satisfying relationships, even though the parts came from quite distant parts of the world. The Swedish tapestry inspired the design for the rug, hooked in America. The Danish table and chairs by Hans Wegner are sympathetic to the American-made settee, thanks to their mutual use of a tapering spindle. The color scheme derived from the tapestry, but was executed with such American triumphs as install-it-yourself "Sheetrock" walls and pigskin floors. "Orlon" curtains, and mixed-to-your-order paints.

A Dining Room that Features Enamel

An increasing number of artists and skilled craftsmen are making things in enamel for use in the home. This room was designed around the swarm of enamel butterflies by Margaret Montgomery. Enamel repeats in the red service plates by Jade Snow Wong. Another triumph of modern artistry and skill are the black iron plates inlaid with silver, from India. Just to handle such beautiful objects in the course of daily routine is rewarding. This is an example of how we consider art as a way of living: using beautiful objects in useful ways. Or to say it differently, select useful objects that are also beautiful and the process of living becomes richer, more enjoyable.

The Hawaiian Lanai

The lovely, relaxed way of life that has evolved in Hawaii is greatly aided by the lanai, an outdoor room minus its fourth wall. It is the Hawaiian custom to furnish the lanai with the same care and beauty associated with the living room, and to give it a garden outlook equally choice. This one is a perfect example, for everything the eye sees it caresses. Its design influence is Japanese, but it has been Americanized for comfort.

Living Room in a Beach House

The point of departure in decorating this living room was the tile mural by Phil Dike, depicting beach and sailing life. Rugged yet stylish, it set the tone for the rest of the furnishings: rattan-wrapped with rawhide, Japanese straw matting, raw silk.

A Special Room for Television

In this little room every piece of furniture is handmade by an up-and-coming young man in cabinetry, Sam Maloof. This little room was designed to give his pieces a functional setting, as well as to show how a small space can be fully developed.

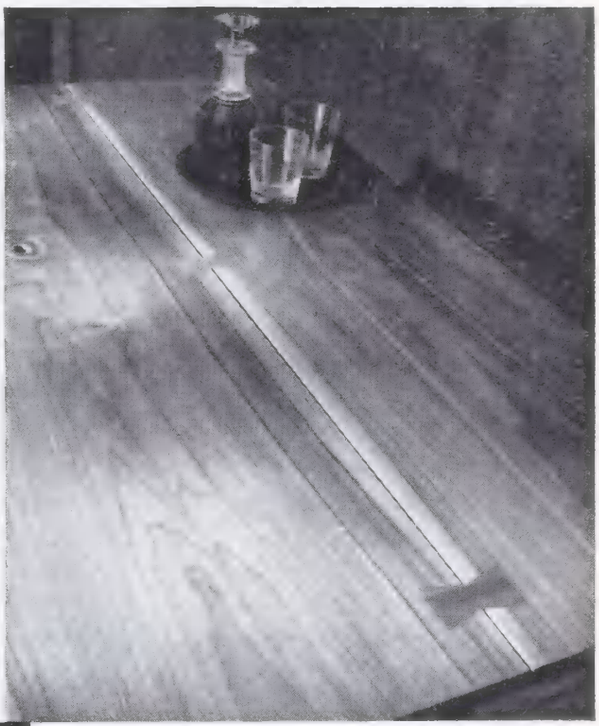
ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

There is a golden note of lyricism in this dining room, thanks to the grace and delicacy of the furniture as much as to the color scheme itself. It looks—and it is—one of a kind. However it costs no more than many a mass-produced dining room suite, despite the fact that it is the handmade product of George Nakashima, furniture designer.

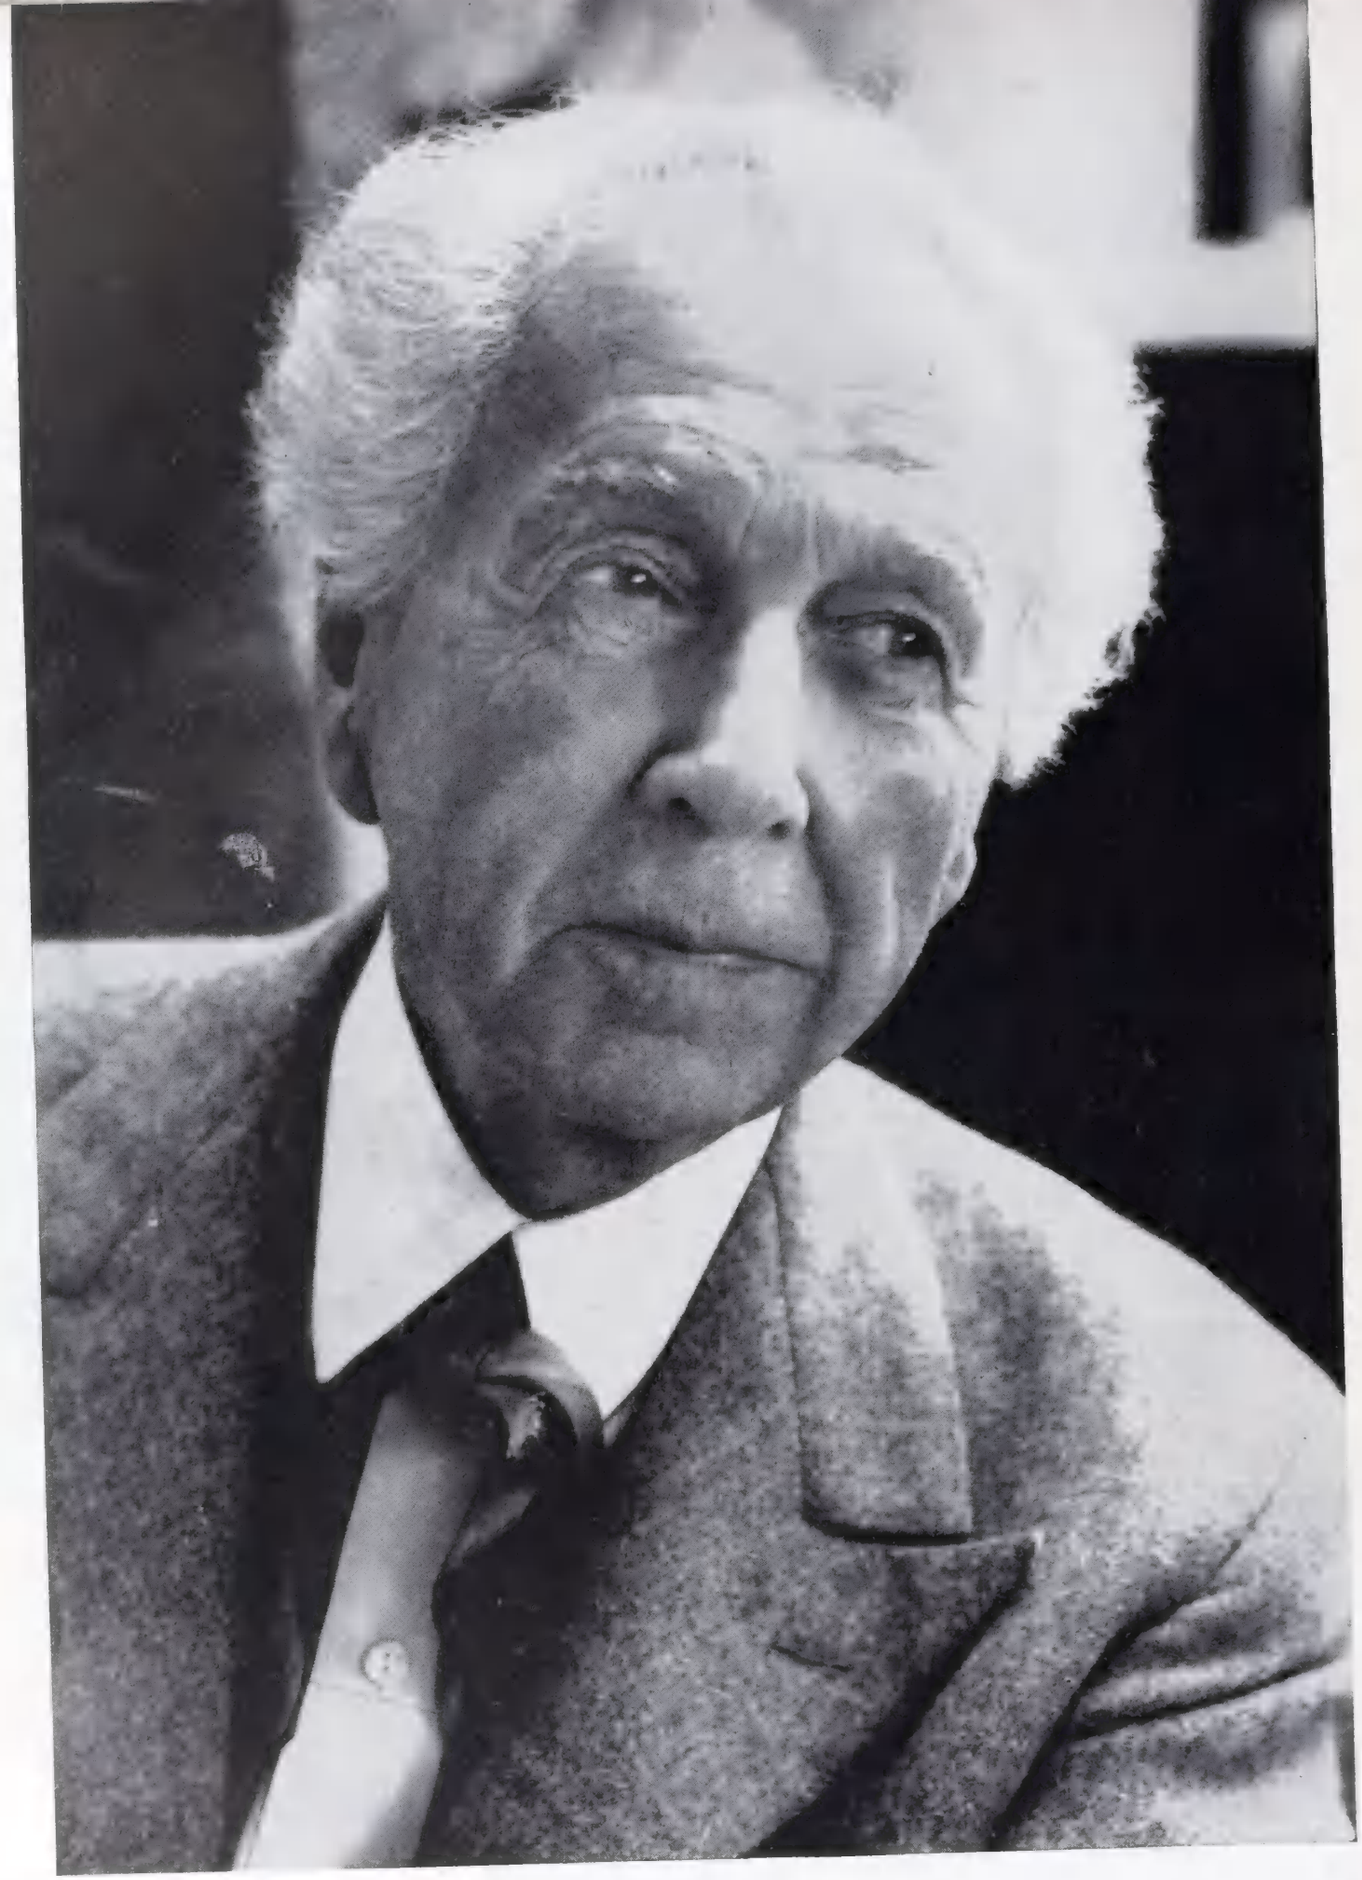
This service of blue-glazed pottery by Marguerite Wildenhain greatly contributes to the feeling of distinction and real individuality here, because it has the same handcrafted quality as the furniture. The same effect derives from the personal work of creative weavers, mosaicists and other artisans, whose work is less costly than you'd expect.



A handcrafted object needn't cost more

When you buy direct from the artist-craftsman, the prices are often lower than for mass-produced merchandise. These beautifully finished handmade chairs, for instance, cost $60. The table costs $150. They are works of art

This room paints two bright pictures: First, it shows by its very existence that the practise of exquisite craftsmanship has been quietly and steadily accompanying our more widely known system of mass production. And, second, it proves by its prices that the handcrafted object need cost no more.



When you go directly to the craftsman for his furniture, his ceramics or his weaving, you often benefit directly from his lower overhead and lower cost operation. You eliminate the middle-man, who performs his best function when he deals with mass-produced merchandise, impossible to buy directly. It means, of course, ordering by mail or traveling to the artisan's showroom in order to see what you are buying.

Take George Nakashima, whose graceful furniture on these pages speaks eloquently for artisans in general. To see it, to touch it, you must go to his shop in New Hope, Pennsylvania. But they cost remarkably little for their extraordinary quality. How does he do it? (Please turn to page 262)

Close-up of a table by George Nakashima illustrates strikingly the quality achieved only by a handcrafted object. Note in the table-top (above) the careful matching of boards to get a light strip down the center, the exploitation of the natural pattern in the grain of wood, the fine workmanship in the joinery, the unique touch of using a knot-hole as if it were a beauty mark. Note (left) the tapering, sculptural lines. And all this can be had at remarkably low cost.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL DEDICATES THIS EXHIBITION TO FRANK LLOYD WRIGHT

. . . who is still working, as he has been for more than 60 years, to help us all realize the best life possible in our wonderful time.

As Mr. Wright has said, "Our era has provided us with the greatest tool box on earth. We can truly build anything with it, but we are only just beginning to realize what it is in our power to build. We limit ourselves to outmoded patterns, that don't even begin to use the great new possibilities of our fine new tool box.

"How can one know the joy of buoyant health if one has never even known good health? People who have never seen or never lived in a beautiful environment, or never lived surrounded by the quiet harmony of organic architecture can never know what they have missed. This Exhibition may serve to give them some idea."

House Beautiful hopes it will. At least it will give people who are seeking a more beautiful life something definite to aim at. For we have tried to reconstruct as completely as it is possible in an exhibition hall, a spiritual and physical environment appropriate to the possessions, the activities and the moods that we find in the homes of people of culture who have discovered their own formula for living a good, full life.

Here you will find rooms that are not "sets," that is to say, made to fit the mythical rule, but rather a pleasant means for living beautifully, for pursuing the personal interests of a more satisfying life. These rooms are not "parloresque" (for showing off) with everything in its place and nothing to be out of place. These rooms were created solely for the repose, convenience and pleasure of their occupants. Every room has the stamp of personality. You can easily tell from what you see the kind of person that might be living there.

This entire Exhibition was photographed by Maynard L. Parker

This show can give you a lot or a little, depending on what you are looking for. It can give you a color scheme for redecorating or it can inspire a vision for a whole new way of life. Here are 11 guides to use in looking

How to look at this Exhibition

1. Above all, notice how the reality of the building (or the rooms) does not consist in the four walls and the roof but in the space to be lived in. We hope these examples will encourage you always to think from the inside outward. Too many people think of the house from the outside inward. This cannot produce a house that is good for living.

2. Though these rooms are unrelated to each other, and no more than one would ever occur in a single house, the principles that created them apply to all houses and all rooms anywhere. For the good solution always derives from organizing the nature of the circumstances, the materials to be used, the needs of the occupants and the place. These are what shape the visible form. There is no other way that lets you arrive at function, beauty and character.

3. The show points up how immense is the variety of fine handmade and machine-made objects that have had the benefit of artists' designing.

4. These rooms demonstrate how you may call on the services of architects, decorators, artists, craftsmen and artisans to enrich your home and to accomplish what you want. A very important goal of this Exhibition is to show the high degree of integration possible when professionals, artists and craftsmen work together from the very beginning. It also illustrates how very many creative artists and craftsmen are available, waiting to be called upon to create special effects for you—and at a lower cost than you might expect.

5. Notice how the architectural framework of all the rooms is more than the standard boxiness. These rooms leave no doubt that fine architecture is the basis of a fine environment, for they show how architecture can heighten life rather than limit it.

6. The Exhibition shows how enriched rooms become when the occupants have absorbing interests and, because this is so, that there are as many kinds of rooms possible as there are kinds of people. Notice how being interested in all of life in its many aspects helps you to have a more beautiful, more interesting, more personal home.

7. Notice how the necessities for everyday use can be so beautiful that every phase of living can be enriched. Look closely at the everyday objects in the various rooms and see how esthetically pleasurable they can be while in no way sacrificing their usefulness. They show the distinction between fine and useful art to be an unnecessary one.

8. Note how lighting can be so skillful and subtle it can be also considered an art.

9. The Exhibition shows that art is more than paintings on the wall. Art also is the way the contents of a room or a house are assembled, the way life is lived within the home. It affects the depth of perception, the breadth of interests of the people. It extends to the graciousness and amenities enjoyed by the owners and guests.

10. The Exhibition proves that a profession of exquisite craftsmanship has been growing along with the widespread benefits of industrial production. Together, craftsman and mechanic, artists and industrial designer, they now offer Americans the splendor of a new civilization which is neither all handicraft nor all mechanized, but combines the virtues and advantages of both.

11. The Exhibition establishes that the best in American life today can mean the best of all times and all countries. As you "visit" the rooms, note how many different countries are represented, how many different periods and cultures are tastefully and harmoniously joined, and how American and contemporary it all is in the over-all effect and feeling of its architecture and furnishings.

Among the many reasons that HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's staff designed this Exhibition was to point up a lot of facts that are not commonly known or that are contrary to widely held but fallacious theories about American life.

We think American life is badly reported. It's not altogether the fault of the reporters. For the best part of American life is the home life, and our homes are not open to the kind of reporters who make the social pronouncements and gather the statistics. Homes don't lend themselves to punch-card systems or public-opinion surveys. You can't get the human-content by looking at photographs. You can only learn about home life by seeing homes and their occupants.

You have to see thousands of them, in all income brackets, year after year in all 48 states. Otherwise you can get a wrong sampling and come up with the wrong conclusions.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has the opportunity to get into people's homes, to get the correct sampling. What we see is this: the home life of this Mid-20th Century is the finest that people have ever known. And more people are experiencing it than ever in the history of man. We are developing a culture, even though we are a relatively young nation and even though foreign nations dismiss us as crassly materialistic.

So we have designed this Exhibition as a distillation of what we've been seeing across the nation since the war. Call it a cross-section of taste. Call it a parade of individuality. But no matter what you call it, it's a picture of what people are doing, or aspire to do, in their own homes. And you can see it in the flesh, complete with the stamp the occupants themselves leave on their possessions.

For more about this Sculpture Garden with its brick mural, see page 245.

The Exhibition was created with the generosity of manufacturers, retailers, artists, artisans, architects, decorators and one labor union. Nothing was purchased, no fees were paid. Some manufacturers paid for installation of their materials. Other labor costs were paid by the Los Angeles County Fair Association. Artists executed special designs without pay. When asked to participate, everyone welcomed the opportunity to show how his product or talent could contribute to the flowering of the American ways of life.

How to bring life to a living room

Whatever your deepest, most passionate interests in life, whether making jewelry or collec fine ceramics, as here, by bringing them into your livin room, you bring your living roon and your hours at home to life

A piece with many purposes

It stands neat and compact against the wall, ready to roll into use.

It opens into a drink-and-snack bar with place for everything.

Its Formica top in the center will hold an electric hot tray.

It can be used as a table for one or two, for lunch or buffet supper.

Reflect a moment on what you like to do most. Read? Listen to music? Talk? Collect embroidery? Make something? Then whatever it is or whatever they are, bring them into the room where you spend most of your hours at home—the living room—and you bring it to life.

You bring not only life but a warm and personal beauty to it as well, a touch of individual character and personality. Each room of the 22 in this Exhibition illustrates this truth. This room shows you what happens when people are profoundly interested in making jewelry with semi-precious stones, fish vertebrae or whatever intrigues them; yet at the same time are devoted to their collection of the finest work of the new potters, which is very fine indeed. Study the way their jars of semi-precious stones and their array of ceramics decorate as they enliven the room.

Each is a work of art, together they enhance and enliven this room, for the occupants here are deeply interested in collecting the finest pieces of pottery.

The story of this living room is the story of the people who live in it. It has the interest of their interests, the special beauty of their favorite pursuits.

A ROOM TO BE ALONE IN

Designed as a retreat for a business man who sometimes brings his work home, and who is also interested in mineralogy

One of House Beautiful's purposes, in creating this Exhibition, has been to show what beauty results when there is a high degree of interlocking between the architecture and the furnishings of either a house or a room. This room shows it to a very marked degree.

For this room has a richness and glamour that made it the room most liked by the hundreds who were seeing the show under construction. From the workmen who built it to the department-store executives and decorators who lent us merchandise, this room caused the most open envy and frank admiration. Why? What quality does it have that makes so many kinds of people so responsive to it? Study it; see if you can tell.

The work table is equipped at all times with the things this man is most interested in: books, magazines and equipment of a devoted mineralogist. And why not? What's more important than your own interests and your joy in them?

This room is geared for the private life of one person, though two or three are easily made welcome. The sofa is for contemplation of the shadow-play outside, listening to the trickling fountain, or quietly examining his own thoughts.

The idea of such use of concrete block was first projected by Frank Lloyd Wright in 1922 in a house for Owen D. Young. The application of this principle here is by John Hill, who also designed the rest of the room.

Please turn the page

Panoramic view shows magnificently how room can be all-of-one-piece, a whole. Yet motifs are not monotonous.

Many variations arise from this fresh use of square concrete blocks. Even terrazzo tables and rug blend with them.

A work table, in front of a book-lined wall, makes work convenient, inviting. Table and chair by Alfred Browning Parker.

Triangle tables compose in many ways.

HOW TO LOOK AT THIS ROOM:

▸ See how a common building material can be made exciting enough to be the inside finish.

▸ Notice how the architecture and decorating harmonize and echo each other. The diamonds, triangles and V lines of the concrete block wall are repeated in the floor plan, sofa, rug, little tables, pillows, bar and planting triangle. An excellent example of integration in design, it produces unity and character—the highest qualities design can aspire to.

▸ Notice how the lighting brings out the planes and textures in the walls; how light shining on the table-desk just covers top of table.

▸ Look at the five pieces of specially-designed-and-commissioned art: the alligator fountain and its related water spout over the bar, the concrete bowl by the fireplace, the log-rest inside. The triangle tables of terrazzo and minerals repeat the architectural motif and reflect the owner's chief interest, which is mineralogy.

A room to be alone in continued

The drink bar and its cupboard are also triangles, set diagonally into the corner made by meeting of the fountain's wall with outside wall. Counter is poured concrete and sink is likewise of concrete, specially formed and then polished to be smooth and cleanable. Water spigot (a stylized head of an alligator that relates to the fountain) is by Sculptor John Svenson, who did all the sculpture in the room.

Perhaps this room achieves glamour because it did not strive for it, just for the sake of effect. Like a truly glamorous personality—always honest, fresh, real—it comes by its glamour not because it means to but because it arises naturally out of the way the materials were used, frankly and honestly, to show what they are. The rough blocks, laid on edge the way the Romans and the Greeks did it, have been given a freshness by being set in different planes to create shadows and patterns. The roughness of the gently stained blocks is contrasted with the smooth, soft surfaces: leather, silk, lush-pile hooked rug, foam rubber. This contrast produces a feeling of richness, yet the richness emerges from the materials themselves and so is natural and unforced. Virtually everything contributes to the main scheme—the complex play of diamonds, triangles and V lines.

Very few other elements were introduced, like grace notes in music, so there would be no monotony: the curves of the table and chair, the cubical leather chairs and their cube-tables, (Please turn to page 229)

Log-rest of black iron continues the development of the V motif, a series of V's contained within a square. A fine example of the variety possible with one theme. Designed by John Hill, made by Charles Piper.

Beauty has come back to the useful arts, and the distinction between the fine and the useful arts is being forgotten, as Emerson predicted it would. A new American beauty is no longer something to be wished for. It is here. The Exhibition before you simply mirrors and records it Useful, beautiful stoneware by Harrison McIntosh. Exhibition pieces, costing $30 to $50.

Here is the New American Beauty

If you are one of the one million who will be seeing the rooms of this Exhibition, how lucky you are. If not, you must let your fancy roam through them, stopping here and there to watch foliage do a shadow dance in front of a window, to remark the shaft of light from a clerestory window streaming down a stone wall, to listen to the sound of falling water, to feel the rhythm of triangles and diamonds in the concrete wall of one living room, to overhear the decorative dialogue between stones and fabrics in another.

If you could sit in these rooms (choose your own from the Exhibition; few would choose them all), the word architecture would come to life. It would no longer mean the naves and apses of a cathedral, the colonnades of a Greek temple, the distant, dutiful pilgrimages to dusty ruins. It would now mean what you experience in your own home, whether you feel enclosed by the four walls of a box or literally liberated by changing planes and views that are created by fine design, whether you are vaguely uneasy with the structure or peacefully at ease with its strength, whether you are bored by the commonplaceness of your surroundings or stimulated by their character.

The word furnishings need no longer summon up sessions at a furniture store, but rather recall the golden lyricism of Nakashima, the silver-rich elegance of Robsjohn-Gibbings, the terrazzo-topped tables of Margaret Bruton—all in a living, livable setting. (Please turn the page)

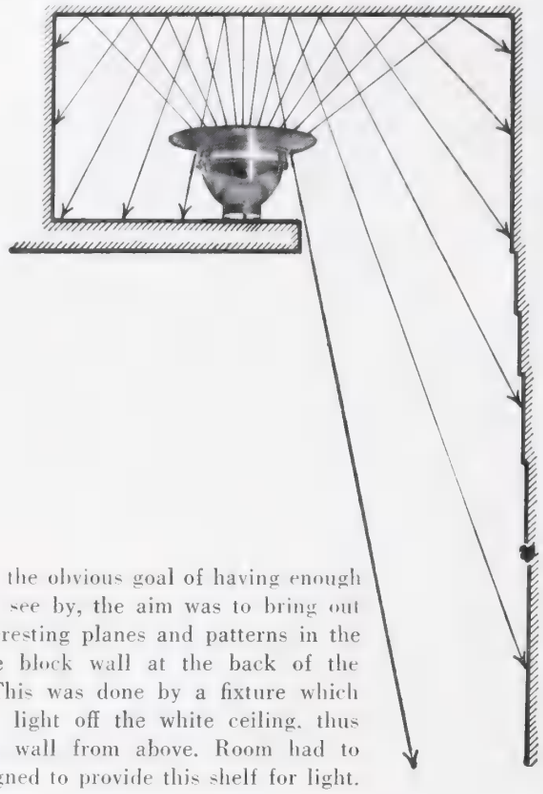
And so decorating and accessories now mean everything you like, embroidery, jewel-making, collecting stones or pre-Columbian art, books or records. They mean the integration of all your interests with your daily life: not a separation of them into non-touching compartments. They mean bringing all the activities you love into your life by bringing them into your living room. It's as simple and direct as that.

Art, too, comes to life and descends from the easel and the pedestal into your personal world as fine ceramics for the spices in the kitchen, for the food on the dining table and even for the toothbrush in the bathroom. It is part of your sculptured chairs, the design and weave of your floor coverings, the tile pattern of your counters, the total experience of your 24 hours.



These rooms are filled with things of grace and meaning, possessed with the function of beauty as well as the beauty of function. They show the best in today's living, as the best is actually being enjoyed in many homes across the country, whose rooms have largely inspired those in the Exhibition. For the 22 rooms of the exhibition are distinctly of our world and time: they are the product of our people; they have whatever quality we have.

But how often people are unaware of their own quality, or the quality of their own time. Even the ancient Chinese, to whom we owe so much, may have missed their own greatest contributions to civilization. Their writers elevated calligraphy, you might call it penmanship, to supremacy among the arts. What a loss it would have been to the world if the Chineses artists and artisans had abandoned the "minor" arts of ceramics and bronzes, cabinetry and cooking, building, gardening and flower arranging to take up the "major" art of wielding a brush, because of the exalted status of calligraphy in the eyes of the sophisticates of their day!

The Greeks, too, were oddly blind to some of the quality of their own time. As we have pointed out before, the Parthenon was long part of the Athenian skyline before it dawned on the Athenians that it was one of their glories. The idea seems never to have occurred to Plato, which shouldn't surprise us overmuch, since few of our social philosophers or art critics seem aware of one of the most creative forces in America today, namely, the architecture of the individual home.

So, at this point let us interject this parenthetical advice: As you look for art in these rooms, don't fail, above all, to look at the art of these rooms, for it is most significant of all the arts shown.

Don't miss the way the walls of the rooms compose and recompose as you move (in your mind's eye) within them. Note how the structural members offer both strength and beauty, satisfying the intelligence and the sensibility at the same time. But, best of all, try to (Please turn to page 216)

Besides the obvious goal of having enough light to see by, the aim was to bring out the interesting planes and patterns in the concrete block wall at the back of the room. This was done by a fixture which bounces light off the white ceiling, thus flooding wall from above. Room had to be designed to provide this shelf for light.

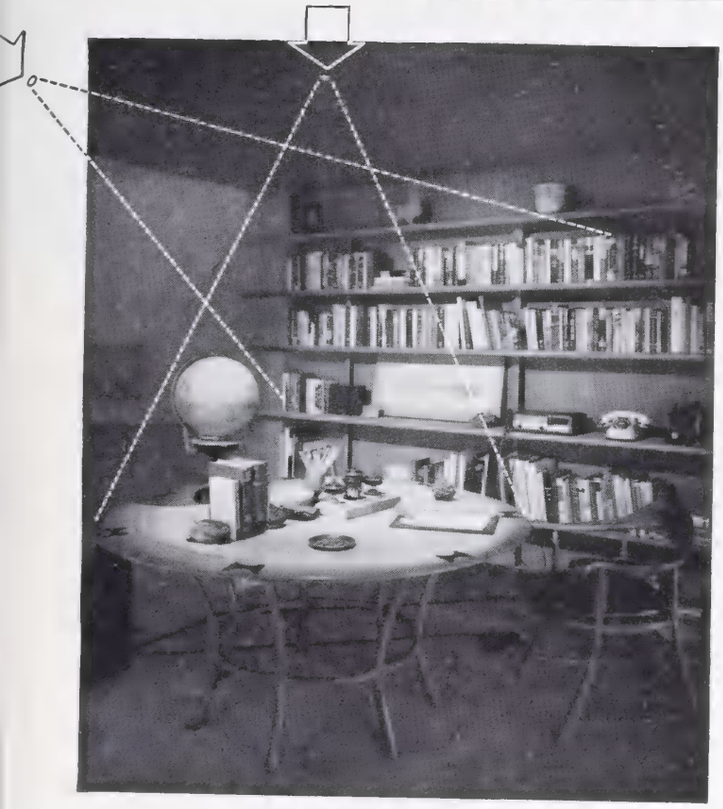
The Art of Lighting the Home

This Exhibition in Pomona, California, is also a Lighting Show. Never, in one place, have there been so many demonstrations of how light may be used artfully and pleasingly. Never have so many examples of the skill of the lighting artist been on public view under one roof.

Very few people are aware that lighting has also been developing as an art—a glamour-packed, dramatic art. Artful lighting is very hard to photograph, because the kind of light photographers need to take pictures is stronger and more uniformly spread, and thus swallows up the artistic lighting and erases the effect that is normally wanted. So magazines find it almost impossible to show light-in-action, for when the lighting shows, the details of the room don't register in the picture. (Everything may look fine to the eye-in-the-room but not to the emulsion-on-the-film.)

Because we show good definitive pictures of these rooms elsewhere in this issue, we can "dare" to show you true lighting pictures, which enable you to see the path of light and its action on the object to be lighted. But even these pictures do not show very well the source of light, because it isn't supposed to show. One of the first requirements of artful lighting is that you must be unaware of the source, and see only the result. When you don't see the source from which the light is coming, you are not getting a high brightness contrast, which is the technical way of saying: you don't get glare. Glareless light is the key to effective, artistic lighting (as well as comfortable lighting).



The artists who designed and installed the lighting in these rooms were Rudolph Wendel and his staff, of New York and Los Angeles, who have been installing the special lighting in the great homes and the museums of this country for the past 30 years. We learned a great deal from watching the Wendel specialists experiment by the hour to get the effects we (and they) were trying to achieve.

The main thing we learned from our watching was this: Lighting without an object to reflect light is an abstraction—really non-existent. Lighting has no aim in itself. It is the complete servant of the object. Until you have something to light you cannot begin to think about how to do it. Therefore, the best light must be integrated into the architectural and decorative scheme, and be one with it. It can't be planned or thought of as separate from it.

All this is quite the opposite of the way most people think of lighting, for we have been taught to assume that by putting enough wattage into a room everything else follows, give or take a few (Please turn to page 251)

Lighting the keyboard and music rack of a piano was done by an optical light, a complex arrangement of lenses that directs a strong beam at the space to be lighted. To prevent light spilling into areas not wanted, beam passes through a template cut so it stops light from hitting such areas. Tiny hole in ceiling is all that shows light source.

Two optical fixtures hidden in the ceiling do the twin jobs of lighting the top of the work table and the bookcases. Even though these two paths of light cross, you do not see the presence of either, unless you deliberately blow smoke beneath the pinpoint holes. Templates control lighted areas.

Skylights in the high ceiling let in daylight, at night provide artificial light from the same direction. Otherwise room would lose its loftiness. Pinpoint "optical" over card table puts light exactly on table tops, not in laps. Light spreads evenly on mural behind sofa, but none hits sofa.

A BEDROOM-DRESSING ROOM SUITE

Here is one of the most precious features a house can boast—a truly personal master suite, a private apartment in itself

HOW TO LOOK AT THIS ROOM:

▶ Visualize this as the intimate retreat every couple longs for—a personal sanctum where they can separate themselves from the household and renew a private life of their own.

▶ See how this room is bedroom, sitting room, breakfast corner, dressing room, lavatory and garden; how, despite its open plan, furniture placement indicates separate areas without partitions.

▶ Notice especially that art is integrated into the room's very structure with mosaic insets in the marble wall.

▶ See how light comes from the same source day and night through glass skylights, which also contain fixtures for night lighting.

▶ Note the unusual masonry—marble, pebble concrete, glass mosaics.

Here you could sleep, catch your breath, talk intimately, read, write a letter in peace. Redwood plywood wardrobe screens off the dressing room.

A BEDROOM—DRESSING ROOM SUITE

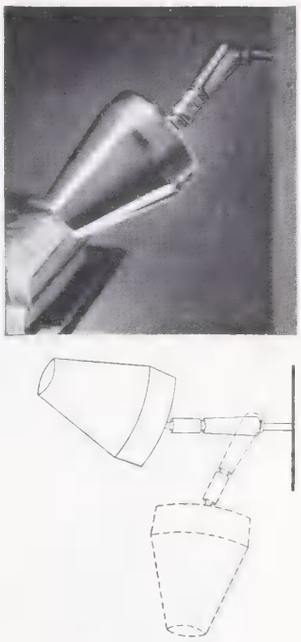
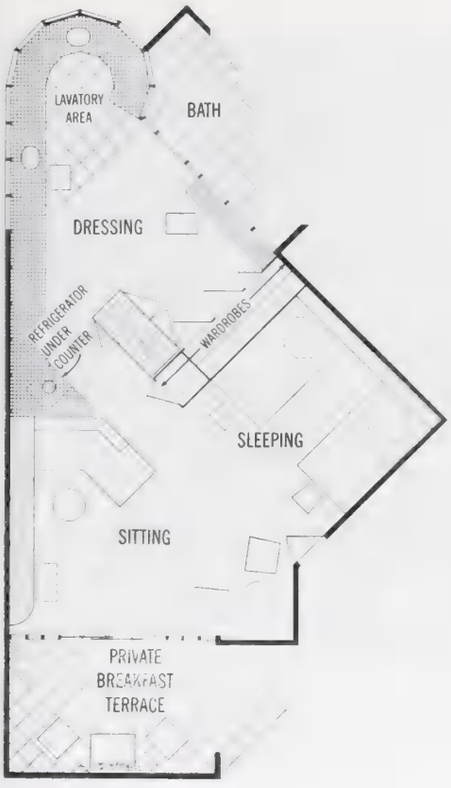
Dressing-room area is bathed in a shadowless daylight entering through sand-blasted glass walls. Floor is cement tile, patterned in white pebbles, ground down smooth. Mosaic counter, with redwood drawers underneath, is a continuation of breakfast bar.

This is a room where people live in intimate daily contact with the beautiful. The door pulls they touch on the redwood wardrobe and dressing-room cabinets are mosaics, made by Arthur Ames, and they echo the color and character of the room.





The most practical objects are esthetic delights. In the lavatory area there are two stainless steel basins like this one, sunk into the mosaic counter top, contrasting their satiny gleam with the glowing color of glass mosaic. Flower-like valves and faucets are handmade silver by Allan Adler.

Like a squared-off dome, ceiling above dressing table counter rises to a skylight so that this area is bathed by clear daylight. Nighttime illumination comes from the same direction, in similar intensity, from a fixture which throws true shadowless light, particularly desired in a dressing room.

Bed lights installed in the headboard shown on page 201 may be rotated a full 360°. Their beam can thus be directed to any position for well-lighted reading.

In this open plan, division between areas is merely implied by devices like the jutting counter and angular sofa, and the L-shaped wardrobe-cupboard unit which is not quite full ceiling height.

You can regard all the rooms in this Exhibition as straws in the wind of American living. But this self-sufficient bedroom "apartment," reflects two truths about modern life which have already started to change the plan of our homes.

One is the instinctive need, felt by parents everywhere in these days of busy close-quarter family living, for a separate place where they may go to talk, relax and get to know each other again. For no matter how much you love your children or the in-laws who live with you, there are times when you must, for their good as well as your own, shut them out and lead a private life together. This is wisdom, and the increasing prevalence of the master suite, as opposed to the master bedroom, proves that many people are beginning to understand that the way to improve the quality of their family life is to improve the quality of the life they share as a couple.

Here, too, is a significant reflection of what is happening to the American kitchen now that most people are servantless and meals are more casual. The kitchen is, in fact, breaking up, moving all over the house and out of doors. For with our portable, clean-operating electrical appliances, we can cook in any room so long as it has an electric outlet. This breakfast counter symbolizes this fact with its built-in heating unit, a refrigerator, generous outlets, and a battery of trim appliances, made so esthetically acceptable that even preparing breakfast in the bedroom becomes a pleasure.

The "Calrod" heating unit set in mosaic, the refrigerator, the double electric outlet to service appliances—these are signs of the subtle changes occurring in our ways of living. They are only for the occasional snack, but they are symptomatic of how the kitchen's functions are being decentralized and taken over by the electrified cooking utensil.

The meaning of America is

The High Quality of our Daily Life

By MAC LINDAHL

House Beautiful recently sent a visiting Swedish writer across the U. S. A. to get his reaction to the way we live. Here is his report. It is specially pertinent to this month's issue

To know the nature of the American contribution to the world you must know the American people. But to know Americans you must know their homes and the way they live 24 hours a day.

How few of us in Europe really know your homes. How few of us have witnessed the character and high quality of your daily life, which, in my opinion, is your finest contribution to the world. We see the traffic of New York, the traffic of Chicago and the traffic of San Francisco, if we get that far, and we conclude that America is on wheels. Or we see the television sets in the various bars and we broaden our conclusion and say that when America is not on wheels it is in front of a TV set.

But fortunately some visitors go below the surface. A highly cultured Spanish lady, Señora Maria Luisa Caturla, is one of them. After a three-month stay in the United States she was interviewed about her impressions by a leading magazine. This is what she said. "One is supposed to perceive that the characteristic American thing is the automobile, but it is not so. The characteristic American thing is the young housewife. How much she does, and wholly without servants—her house so clean, her children so well cared for, her meals so quickly and skillfully prepared, and herself so charming! How is it contrived? In Europe, they would say that it was thanks to the American machinery, but I think otherwise. I think the American housewife has done more than master machines. I think she has mastered time."

Now I can enthusiastically report that Señora Caturla was right, so far as she goes. In Europe, as in the Far East, the world is still a man's world. In the United States it is the family's. Co-operation in a spirit of mutual respect is the password, men and women together achieving a domestic happiness new in the history of civilization.

I've talked to these men and women. My notes are full of their conversations, the vital bubbling spirit that created the extraordinarily lovely homes that you have in America. The high level of taste in your architecture and furnishings is the direct result of these people. From the hooked rug of Cape Cod to the Natzler ceramic bowl on a dinner table in California you see expressions of this remarkably high level. Ancient and modern is blended with care. Early New England pressed glass, a Steuben vase, a Paul Revere cup may be found in the same room as a Hadley chest and a Hans Wegner chair.

I must confess I hadn't expected this. I don't think many Europeans do. We are not surprised by the efficiency of your machines, the low cost of machine-products, but we have wrongly assumed that you have no craftsmen or even an interest in fine craftsmanship. So imagine my delight when I bought a Natzler piece, a thing of great beauty and true art, for only $10! When this happens in a country, it indicates a good deal about it. That Natzler pottery is symbolic.

In Sweden many simply can't understand why the best work of our artists and designers should be so sought by Americans. Now I know why we don't understand, why I didn't understand until I traveled across your country. We underestimated you (almost as much as many of your own writers underestimate you). It took a long trip and many visits to your homes before I realized that you Americans have a keen sense for the (Please turn to page 252)

The Art

Pleasing the eye, as a way to predispose the mind and the palate, is in every artful cook's bag of tricks. But it is also a pleasure in its own right. Setting a pretty table with original combinations of the "necessaries" is just plain fun. Women who keep enlarging their supply of table appointments, regardless of whether they are needed or not, are indulging in this kind of fun. This table is an example. It was sheer pleasure to assemble. See why! There is copper woven in the heavy silk runners. The large plates are copper luster. The small dishes are glass decorated with gold. The candle holders are brass. Even the wallpaper is flecked with gold. It all adds up to a melody in metallics. Any food, of any color, would look well. Everything from V. C. Morris.

of the Table is the First Art

Though architecture is the sheltering mother of all art, the arts pertaining to food —preparation, presentation and enjoyment—are the most frequently practiced, the most essential to health and well-being. Food is the daily art of living.

In all the world there is not a single person who can live through a single day without giving some thought to food. This does not mean that all people everywhere are of necessity practitioners of the art of eating. Too many of us are too hungry; some are not hungry enough. We do not hold with certain self-styled gourmets who believe that the arts of the table can develop only in an over-fed civilization. This is the decadent attitude which insists that a work of art and a thing of use are, and must remain, forever separate.

Hunger is the passion motivating all the arts of the table. But too much hunger or too little robs us of the fine appreciation which transmutes mere satisfaction into a form of artistic expression.

Here in America at the present time we have perhaps the world's most ideal climate for the development of a truly great gourmet tradition. We live in a land of unprecedented plenty. Yet we are still a lusty, energetic, hard-working people, far from being satiated with the good things of life. Unlike the Romans in the days of Lucullus, we need not pique our appetites with larks' tongues nor, like the courtiers of Louis XIV, do we find it necessary to pander to jaded palates with elaborate subtleties or pièces montées—castles of cake and fountains of spun sugar. An American's dream of a fine meal is a big, thick, juicy steak, grilled preferably by him in his own back yard. This is a good start for the development of the arts of the table.

The fact that so many of us must concern ourselves with the cooking of our own food, now that the era of servants is over, appears to be a help rather than a deterrent. Almost always before, the gourmet was no more than a sensitive critic. But now cooking has ceased to be a spectator sport and has gained thereby. For the more you know about food, its origin, its growing, its history, preparation, essential character, the more enjoyment you will find in it. As in so many other forms of art and living, the more of yourself you give, the more you get.

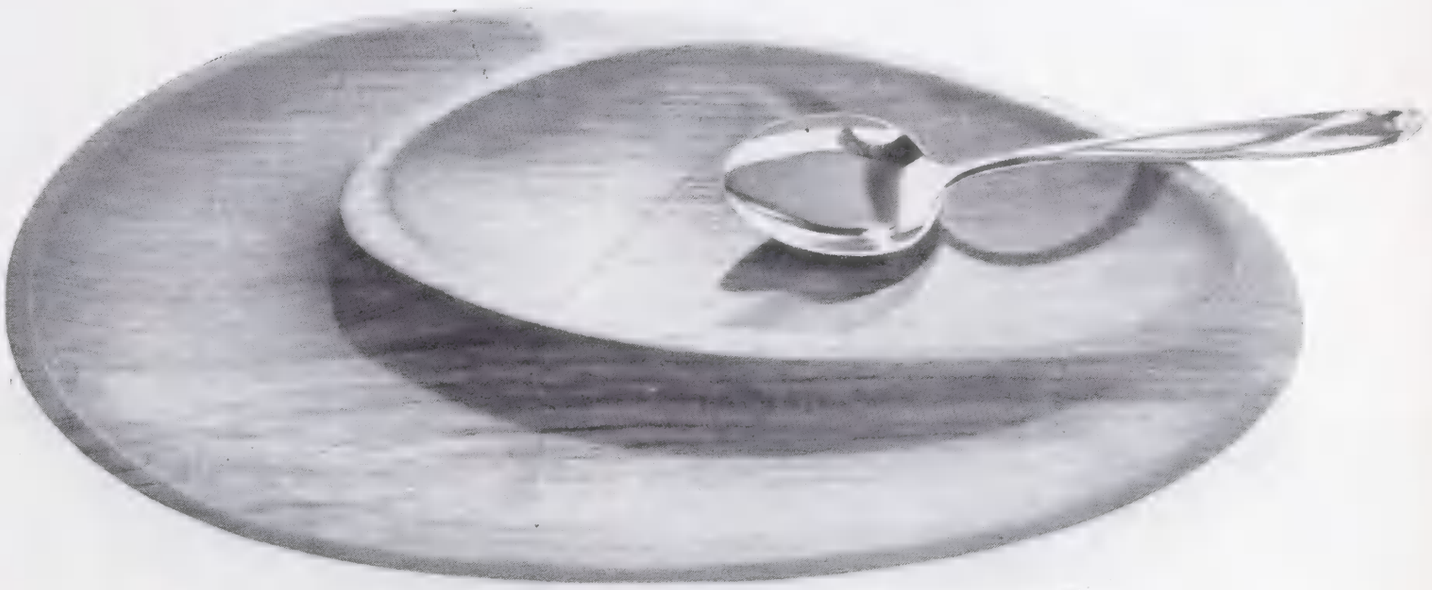
What Makes Food Art

When does an ordinary dish become a creation? What's the difference between a meal that's just a meal and one which is unmistakably a "production"? What transforms the act of cooking from a chore into an art?

Some of the essential differences can't be put into words, not any more than you can describe a painting or a symphony. But, as in all other forms of art, certain elements enter into the divine spark. They contribute to the extraordinary transsubstantiation of material things—flour and meat, butter, milk, eggs, sugar, wine and spice—into something which is a feast not only to the senses but to the spirit.

First, and most important, is the element of joy—pleasure, the play principle—call it what you will. When a job is a joy, you'll probably make an art of it. Simple as that!

That's why it's so important to cook what gives you pleasure, to do the chores you want to do, and leave undone, or get someone else to do, the tasks that bore you.



Next comes suitability—fitting the menu to the people for whom it is intended, to the mood of the moment, to the place, the time, the weather, the available supplies. Then, high on the list, a knowledge and (Please turn to page 265)

The characteristic of glass is to form itself, in the molten stage, into the shape of teardrops. It has been exploited triumphantly here in this vase by Timo Sarpeneva of Finland for the Karhula-Ittala Glassworks. Its liquid, drop-like grace comes from the innate nature of its material. An important design criterion for you to use in evaluating any object is to note whether the material has been worked with or against its nature. This vase can be obtained from Georg Jensen for $95.

The most significant objects in this Exhibition

These objects epitomize the meaning of the whole Exhibition. They show what we mean when we say, "Surround yourself with beauty in the smallest details of your daily life." They also show what beauty comes from designing according to the nature of materials

PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANGELO PINTO

Such are the treasures of our time: useful objects that are endowed with an innate beauty, that ask to be held, to be touched, to be appreciated for their grace as well as their performance.

It used to be that we did not expect our everyday functional possessions to be beautiful. We were not supposed to notice them (as though that were possible). But this is passing.

For these objects go far beyond functionalism. They make a beautiful composition with what they contain. They are beautiful whether in use or empty. They have a functionalism which goes beyond function alone, which requires more mastery by the designer of his material and his tools and technique. They have a quality that only an artist can give to an object.

These artists have made the most of the innate characteristics of their materials—the teardrop tendency of molten glass, the way wood responds to the knife. (Please turn to page 232)

A Center of Living for the Whole Family

Here's that desirable thing—a beautiful living room that's equally as pleasant when filled with people as when only one or two are in it. Many different quiet activities can go on at once, or it can be the stage for the most elegant party. It is shelter that accommodates you

The desk corner, built of the same plywood as the ceiling, was conceived as a quiet place where one member of the family might study while other activities go on in the room. Glass wall to the left brings garden into the room. See plan on page 209.

There can be, indeed there should be, as many different kinds of beautiful rooms in which to lead the good life as there are human beings to live in them. This place of quiet and repose, this private world of light and shadow, of snug walls that simultaneously screen the outdoors with stone and invite nature in through glass—this is one of them. It's a room where an entire family could live the full adventure of every day, relaxed, casual, comfortably unhampered by their possessions, and always immersed in a beauty that is as natural as laughter. It is touched with a sort of great-hall grandeur, yet here is the very unpretentious essence of the old-fashioned family sitting room (sometimes it was the kitchen), where the youngsters could study or play while Father read the paper and Mother gossiped with a visiting neighbor. It can hold one, a few, or a crowd.

Picture the lone pianist bemused and content in the luminous shaft of light from the sky, or in the soft diffused glow from the plastic globes which are set in the glazing to light indoors and outdoors by night. You can see children sprawled on the waxed flagstone floor, as much at their ease and as visually appropriate in this natural elegance as their parents' most grandly dressed guests on fete nights. It is a room for the Christmas tree, the club meeting, the children's party, the buffet supper, the wedding—for the whole gamut of events and activities that weave the fabric of family life. Generation after generation could leave its imprint here, and the intrinsic emotional quality of this place would remain steady and constant, embracing whatever changes there might be in its owners' habits.

Except for the piano and the built-in desk, there's no indication of special areas for special (Please turn the page) activities. Your eyes see the room as an integrated unity, one free and open space, where walls, floors, ceiling and even furniture all seem part of each other, flowing together continuously. And that, indeed, is the secret of this room's adaptability to the busy, unpredictable pursuits of casual family life, why it accepts so willingly the inevitable disarray of everyday activity. For it has no one central axis, no one restricting focal point that demands that furniture be lined up here or there, "frozen" into permanent position to keep the room in balance.

Contrast this sense of freedom with the precise quality of the living room on page 214, which we visualize as a dwelling place for adults whose preferences are clearly for a setting that is always at its formal best. Their room, like a Greek peristyle, is recti-linear, and the casual placement of the furniture only serves to point up its straight center axis terminating in a dominant window wall. Frank Lloyd Wright, America's master architect, has said that the most desirable work of art in modern times is a beautiful living room. Here, as you see how walls, floors, ceiling and furnishings flow together, how the mural, specially painted for the room by Richard Haines, seems to merge with wood and stone, you begin to understand what he means by organic architecture—"one thing instead of many things: a great thing instead of a collection of smaller ones."

WHAT TO SEE IN THIS ROOM:

▸ See how a room can have a grandeur, while being unpretentious, protecting and comfortable at the same time.

▸ Notice how simple materials (plywood and stone), intelligently assembled, produce a richness that pleases the eye and the emotions.

▸ Note that this room, with its adjoining terrace, has no hub, no main centerline or axis on which the furniture lines up equally on either side; that there is nevertheless architectural balance and proportion. Result is relaxing and comfortable. One area merges with and flows into another, making a room that invites many activities to go on at the same time.

▸ Observe how the quality comes from the change of planes, the play of textures—smooth against rough—pointed up by light and shadow.

SKETCHES BY GEORGE COOPER RUDOLPH

Street-side view of the house

Bedroom wing and living room embrace the garden

in the house you see here

Living room and barbecue terrace are the only parts of this house in the exhibition. Master bedroom, skylighted like the living room, manifests itself on the exterior with a domed roof. (See sketch top opposite.)

This house exemplifies what we mean by "planning from the inside out." When you look at it, you can see how its outside appearance reflects and expresses the form, character, even the tranquil quality of its interior space.

You can find the reason for every external feature by looking inside. The dominant interior forms become the dominant exterior forms. You will understand this clearly if you compare the interior of the living room on the four preceding pages with the exterior views shown here.

Look first at the soaring ceiling. Then study the crown-shape roof that tops it. See how the demands of the inner space shaped this roof, how its form has evolved naturally, inevitably, from the interior vaulted gathering place, lighted by skylights. The exterior arrangement of openings is the natural result of the arrangement of interior space.

The outside is, in other words, no sham or false front. The exterior is not one thing and the interior another—something so frequently true of traditional houses. Here, inside and outside are indivisible, for essentially they are a single integrated unity of design and material. Note that the same sandstone walls reveal themselves inside and out, that inner and outer wood is redwood.

How to be creative when you spend money

You can enjoy the heady thrill of bringing something into being, inspired by your ideas. You can shop with eyes alert to possibilities for your home. You can be creative, even if you don't think so. Here's how!

We have walked through the rooms of this Exhibition, you and we. You marveled at what you saw, as we hoped you would. But all the time we heard your unspoken comments, your unuttered fears that all this splendor was beyond you.

Let's talk about it openly.

You: It's all more beautiful than anything I've ever seen. It makes me feel wonderful and awful at the same time.

We: Why awful?

You: Well, first of all, because it takes an awful lot of money. More than I'll ever have, I'm afraid. And, second of all, because only a creative person could ever come close to doing what you've done, and I'm far from creative.

We: You know, your "second of all," about your not being creative, is actually more important than your "first of all," about your not having enough money. There are many people with a lot of money who don't achieve half as much as some people with half as much money, if you follow us. It takes what we're calling creative spending to make your money count, whether it's a great deal or very little.

You: That's just it! Here I am with very little money and even less talent for spending it creatively.

We: The less money you have the more important it is to spend it right. But how do you know you're not creative?

You: Because I know I'm not. I can't draw a straight line!

We: Maybe it's been our fault all along. Maybe we talk too much about creativity. Frankly, very few of us on the staff consider ourselves creative, certainly not in any exalted sense. But suddenly, when we were working on these rooms for the Exhibition, every one of us felt creative.

You: What happened?

We: That's what we'd like to explain to you:

We wanted these rooms to be fresh and individual, beautiful and functioning. In other words, we wanted exactly what you want in your own home—a beautiful personal expression that nurtures your soul while it oils the wheels of daily living.

So we did what we advise everybody to do: We talked among ourselves and discussed in detail what we wanted every room to do and to be. One was to be designed and furnished for a man who was interested in mineralogy; it was to be his retreat. Another was for a person or a family who collected pre-Columbian art, spent their vacations on archaeological field trips, and then occupied their leisure time at home studying about ancient civilization.

Each room was planned for real people with real interests, with preferences for certain materials and certain colors, because we have long ago discovered you can't start on the solution until you state the problem. You can't create in a vacuum. Over and over again we've learned that the best solutions come out of clearly stated, clearly defined problems. You have to be limited by the requirements. If there are laws of creativity, then that's the first law.

Here's where you, the client, whose only talent is spending money, can be as creative in your choice of architect or decorator as a Broadway director casting actors for a difficult play—or, better, as a producer picking the right director. Because each room, like each play, requires the right kind of furnishings and decorating, besides the right kind of architecture. Architect and decorator, chosen by the client, like director and set-designer, selected by the producer, have to work together in perfect understanding and harmony.

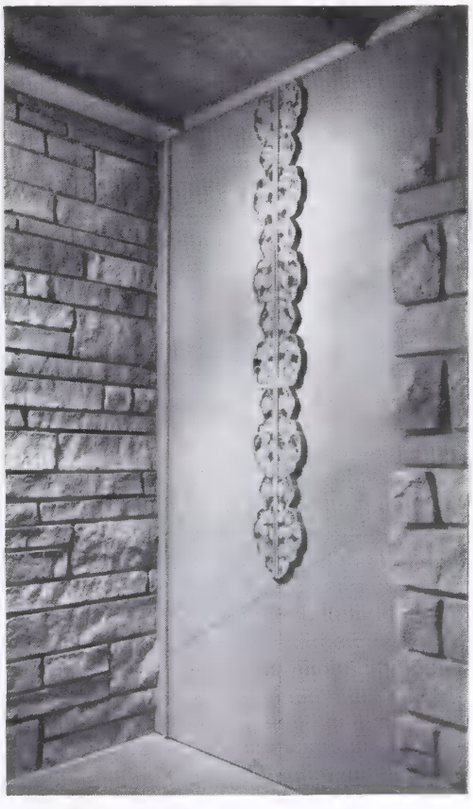
And you, the client, must choose the right ones for the job. That means you must know your wants and needs and those of your family, backward and forward. Otherwise you're not going to be very knowledgeable in your choice of professionals to help you. And you must be familiar with the work of these professionals in homemaking, otherwise you'll not get from them the work you are after. The good ones are flexible and try to give you what they think best solves your needs. But it is up to you to pick the good ones.

We went at each room this way, from the architecture down to the smallest details of accessorizing. We did our best to make ourselves clear to each person involved: architect, painter, sculptor, decorator, ceramist, ironworker, cabinetmaker, and so on. And, as a result, we think we got the best they had in them—and their best, which you have seen for yourself, proved to be magnificent.

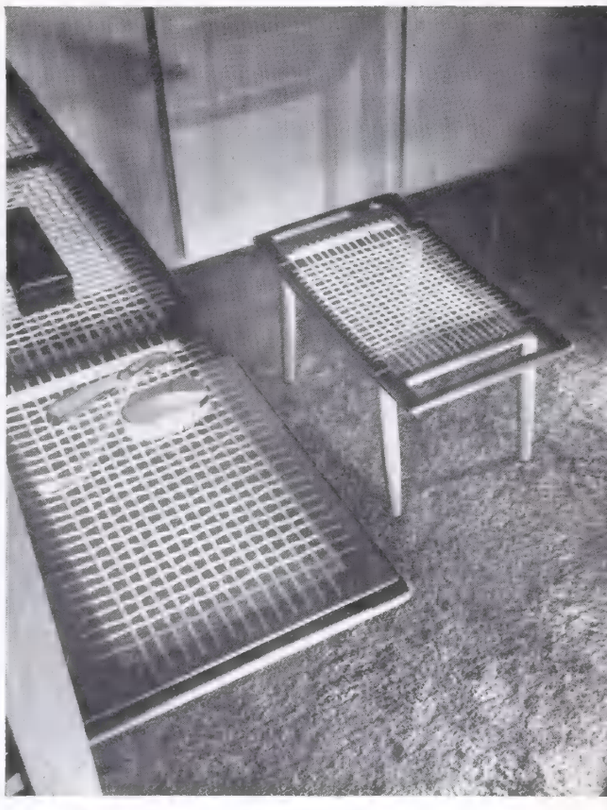
As we worked with them, we began to get that feeling of creativity we mentioned earlier. We had a glowing sense of participating in creative experiences. Here we were encouraging creative people to create, and in the process we had become creative ourselves. Each artist, too, felt the new challenges we offered and welcomed them, as, we have found, any true artist welcomes the chance to bring his art to new life and meaning, to apply his gifts to real situations.

Michelangelo felt the same when he was called on to decorate the Sistine Chapel: so, on a far smaller and much more modest scale, our ceramist felt when he was called on to add his mosaic art to a stone wall or the painter when he created a mural for one of the living rooms.



We began, then, to conceive of ourselves as creative clients. We began to understand much more profoundly why architects say, "It takes a good client to produce a good house. A good architect can't do it by himself."

We add to this the notion that it takes a creative client to have a creative house—and by creative we don't mean a do-it-yourself creative artist. It is creative when you ask a cabinetmaker to create a counter that matches one of his benches already there: when you ask a sculptor to cast a handsome bowl out of concrete using the same aggregate as the concrete wall against which the bowl appears; when you ask a metalworker to forge andirons specially designed and scaled for a particular fireplace.



We didn't create these things ourselves, but we called them into being, and that's being creative too, we think. The same sum of money, spent one way (Please turn the page)

Original door-pulls were too-commercial. They were replaced by great circular handles more residential in character. By Thorleif Petterson of Scandinavian Art Metal; $70.

These door pulls were made from fragments of Chinese carvings. Second-hand stores and antique shops offer such unusual possibilities for alert, creative purchasers.

Since he made the bench ($75) for this dressing room, Sam Maloof was asked to create a glass-top counter (16″ x 72″; $125) to match it.

How to be creative when you spend money or another, can either result in the usual overworked clichés or in a new fresh beauty; and it is the spender who often determines it as much as the artist who is paid.

The Florentines were creative spenders; the Renaissance was the result. We have a hundred times their opportunity today. We have the wealth and the craftsmen, too.

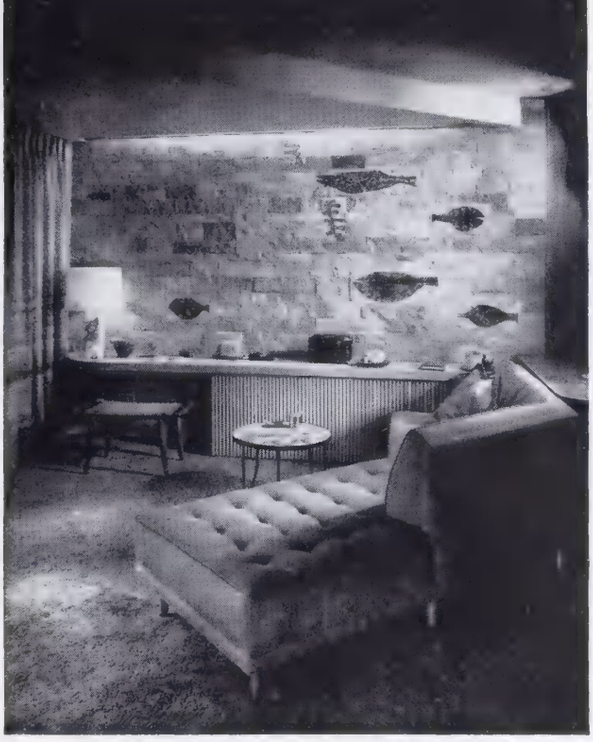
But not everything in the exhibition was artist- or custom-made by any means. There are thousands of fine ready-made things in the market that can solve almost all your problems, if you know how to shop for them and assemble them. And we, just like you, had to know what to choose. We had to know how to use standard, ready-made items in a non-standard, never-before-seen way, because that was the goal we had set for ourselves right from the start. We had to go into the stores and the decorators' shops the same as everybody else. And we didn't want to use what we selected, any more than you, in a fashion already too familiar and long since stereotyped. We didn't want to use the clichés of today, any more than those of yesterday.

We have had a good deal to say, month after month, on the subject of how to be individual. In these Exhibition rooms we had to apply our principles to our own exhibition. In reality all the principles, we found, boiled down to one: If you've seen something again and again, stop and think. Will you be sorry—in a year, in five years, if you do the same thing yourself? That's what counts right now.

Start fresh. Free yourself from the pattern that most people around you have adopted for themselves. You can see it over and over in the house and in the garden, in the kitchen and on the dining table, in every part of their homes.

Why can't a sofa, for instance, go into a bedroom, if it is large enough? Why should it be centered on a wall? Why do you have to arrange two vases symmetrically on the mantelpiece? Why put flowers in a bowl on the dining table as the inevitable bit of decoration for dinner?

The point is not to be different from others just for the sake of being different. The point is to develop your own individual expression for things, because whether you consider yourself creative or not, your only gift to the world is your own special quality. And once you discover your own special quality, you've discovered the secret and the fun of creativity for the rest of your life.



For above all, we want to convey to you the joy and glee of all this. It is pretty heady pleasure when you get the idea to translate the curved seat of a bench into a flat counter. You are pretty pleased with yourself when you get the idea of pasting together different colors of latex-backed carpeting to make an exciting rug (to match a tapestry) that looks as if it cost a thousand dollars when in reality it was created

We fell in love with this gold-glazed glass table service by Alice Petterson, and we had her repeat the same motif in the glass of the ceiling-trellis for the dining room. In other words, we were creative clients.

The dining room at the far left shows other creative spending: Doors were found (free) in a school basement. Too short, a fill piece made them fit. Moldings solved how to hang them. Old carvings make pull out of standard $7.50 a square yard carpeting. (See our living room for people with limited funds, page 219.)

Part of creative purchasing is to have things done by artists. Here, ceramist Arthur Ames enriched a stone wall with his mosaics. (Price is $275 for all seven.)

Creative purchasing means finding the exactly right thing, whether for use or beauty. Above, it's an arrangement of enameled fish for this room with fish mosaics.

Getting such ideas makes you feel outrageously pleased with yourself. You've had an original idea, you've brought it to life, and there is no pleasure that can touch it.

"But is having an idea really creative?" you ask. Yes, it is. The act of creation does not have to be coupled with skills or the ability to draw or paint. Bringing something into being, no matter what tools, materials or artisans you employ, is certainly an act of creation. Using all the resources of your time is being creative in a great big way. You wouldn't disqualify a painter as a creator because he did not make the canvas he paints on. So don't disqualify yourself because you don't hold the hammer, the chisel, the plane, the saw or any other tool.

Seeing the possibilities—that's your role! To do that you have to know what's available, and understand what can be done with it. Naturally you can't dream up a handsome rug made of many pieces of differently-colored broadloom unless you know that such a pasteable product is on the market, that many manufacturers make it (so there'll be dozens of colors to choose from), that it is capable of being worked easily even in small pieces, and by an amateur. Then, after you have the basic idea, you have to shop until you find the right colors for your purposes.

So, to do creative purchasing, you have to be interested in the world around you, in the assets and liabilities of the products offered by all types of dealers. You have to like to shop and poke around in strange stores, like to read advertisements, like to talk to workmen who know their materials—these are the requisites for having this kind of fun. Naturally you can't see the possibilities in things if you don't know they exist. So it helps if you "get around"—mentally and on foot.

All through the rooms of the exhibition you can spot such examples of creative purchasing. We show some on these four pages. Let us give you some other instances we've met in our recent travels:

One woman bought a Chinese vegetable basket of wooden splits, turned it upside down and used it as the base of a table. For her table top she used a straw tray, six feet in diameter. She put the table in her patio. It's big enough to look well outdoors, but also it's right, in its textural quality, for the outdoors. This originality cost her about $12.

An architect picked up scrap stone and salvage steel, free for the hauling, and turned them into the HOUSE BEAUTIFUL Pace Setter House of 1954, one of the most handsome homes we've ever published.

A man went to an auction and bought a Chinese cabinet to house his radio-phonograph equipment.

Another man bought butcher blocks and converted them into durable individual table tops for his dining room.

Many women have found that using cans of baby food gives them a head start toward cooking a complicated dish calling for a strained essence of food. Those women are indeed purchasing and cooking creatively.

There are people who go to a Flower Show after it closes in order to buy the unusual stones often to be found there. Others buy old barns to get the weather-mellowed shingles for a new house.

And here's where we return to your original fear. "It's all beyond me: it takes more money than I have."

The more creatively you buy, the less money you'll need to spend. But you'll have to make up the difference by seeing more clearly (and much more shrewdly) and by spending more time poking through junk shops and junk yards. Another thing: if you are not after the work (Please turn to page 255)

Here the living-dining room is clearly for people with a taste for formality and a deep interest in the culture and artifacts of ancient man. "Let your rooms reflect your way of life," the hypothetical owners of these rooms seem to say. Faience tiles on fireplace hood by Alice and Richard Petterson. Pre-Columbian and other antiquities, Stendahl Gallery.

A room for orderly, formal people reflecting their greatest interest

The parlor has gone, unmourned, and with it the parlor point of view—the notion that your private interests are not for public view, but should be secreted in a hidden-away hobby room or basement, where its clutter will not disturb visitors. Such was the now-dead notion of the divided life.

Today we want to live lives of wholeness, of integration, and all the rooms of the Exhibition express this new spirit. This beautiful living room, for instance, reflects two important sides of one family's full and non-divided life: the desire for a room that is always at its formal best, distinguished and orderly, and the wish to be surrounded with the tools and objects of their deepest interest.

The passion of this family is the ancient past, the study of primitive man, his art and culture. They spend their vacations on field trips and expeditions. At home they fill their leisure moments by repairing the shards and figures that they have found, by reading the many books in their library on anthropology and archaeology.

In the day of the parlor, all this would have taken place in a trophy room or a den. No evidence of it would have appeared in the more public rooms of the house, except perhaps for a glass display case, with Do Not Touch implied all over it, even if no label said so.

The living-dining room on these four pages indicates the change in attitude that is taking place all over America. It shows the widening horizons of our intellectual curiosity, the intensity with which we cultivate our new leisure, the variety and fullness offered by our time.

But, above all, it proves that we are bringing everything we like into our lives by bringing them into our living rooms. We are not separating our real interests from the rooms in which we spend most of our time. If, as here, we are collectors of pre-Columbian art, then we show our understanding of their meaning and significant forms, their fascinating lines and textures by showing them to their finest advantage. They are no longer dry-as-dust museum pieces, but full of lively interest.

Primitive art seems at home in these rooms of great sophistication, because it is treated with a complete insight and knowledge born of daily familiarity and handling. You know that the people here are not trying to be decorative or precious, but are simply furnishing the rooms they live in with the things they feel strongest about.

The same sureness, the same determined taste is apparent in the architecture and the furniture. They speak of people who know what they have learned to want, and have no desire to see it changed. They have a sense of elegance and neatness; they prefer formal rather than informal manners and customs; they want everything in its place and a place for everything. Their aim is not necessarily to please anyone but themselves. At the same time, their rooms seem to say, "Let your rooms reflect your way of life; that is what our study of man and his culture has told us."

WHAT TO SEE IN THIS ROOM:

▶ Note particularly on previous page how the architect achieved a formal setting by creating a strong axis of interest pointing toward a dominant window-wall, yet avoided a box-like feeling usually associated with formal rooms.

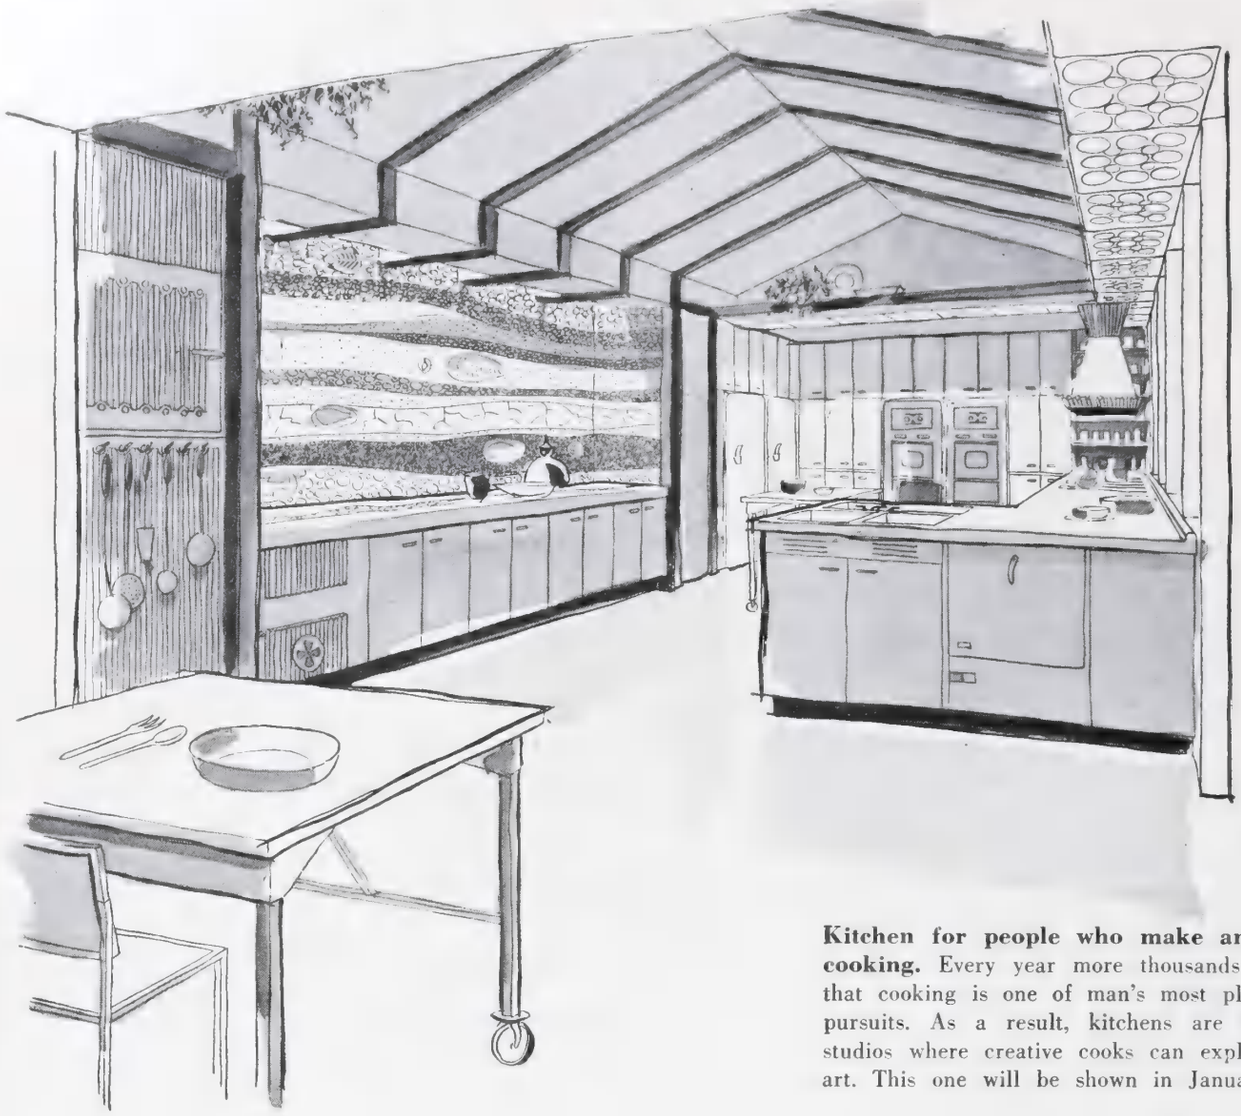
▶ See how casual placement of sofa and chairs heightens by contrast the formality of room and lends feeling of freedom.

▶ See how balanced lighting by day from clerestory window and skylights is electrically duplicated from same sources at night, thus maintaining the same architectural effect constantly.

▶ Observe the harmony of furniture and architecture, their expression of the same mood of distinction and classic sophistication. Everything deliberately aims at an orderly elegance.

▶ Note co-ordination of earth-colored ceramics, wood and fabrics; the highly styled use of white, yellow and red accents.

▶ Study the effective use of owner's collection of primitive art as decorating accessories, giving room owner's personality.



LEFT. A formal dining area is achieved here by raising floor level and by further separating it from living area with plants. Furniture by Robsjohn-Gibbings also contributes to orderly elegance required by owners, as does the restrained beauty of the glazed tile mural by Jean Ames, which echoes the silver note in the furniture.

RIGHT. Architectural adornment and separation of dining from living area are both arrived at by means of potted plants, suspended by silver-plated chains, creating a cascade of flowers. Square plastic panels in ceiling are skylights by day, electric light sources by night. Chains and brackets for plant pots are by Charles Piper.

Kitchen for people who make an art of cooking. Every year more thousands discover that cooking is one of man's most pleasurable pursuits. As a result, kitchens are becoming studios where creative cooks can explore their art. This one will be shown in January 1955.

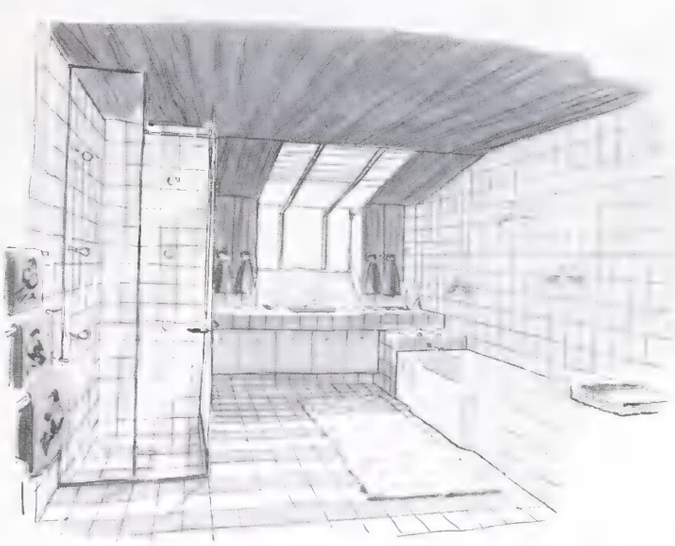
Tailored bathroom for a man. This sets a new high in interesting bathrooms with its circular floor plan and its play of circles and segments of circles within circles. It demonstrates that modern tile setters are just as skillful as the Byzantines and the Romans. See March 1955 issue.



DRAWINGS BY GEORGE COOPER RUDOLPH

A nice living room on limited funds is the goal of 90 per cent of us. But it isn't easy, for it demands of you five things: legwork, "know-how," a fresh approach to keep you from relying on clichés and a knowledge of when to stint, when to buy the best. Designed for a renter who could change nothing basic. Furnished as you will see it at the Fair and in our January, 1955, issue, it cost $1500.

For more data about these rooms, see page 252.

Bathroom for plant lovers. Many plants need the warm, moist heat of bathrooms. So we designed this bathroom to be the perfect climate for such living decorations. The room would indulge you and your moods as much as the plants. Tile mural by Jean Nison. See March, 1955.

Bathroom for a beautiful, white-haired woman. A wall mural of white doves, drawn on the tiles themselves by Millard Sheets, makes this bathroom the indubitable property of a beautiful woman of taste. Even her towels repeat the motif which so becomes her. Also in March, 1955.

How I convert them to good music

By DAN DANZIGER

as told to RICHARD WILLIAMS

BECKER-HOROWITZ

He sells people on good music, because he enjoys it himself. That's how he takes them from Guy Lombardo to Rimski-Korsakov, and makes Chopin part of the art of their daily life

Dan Danziger is head man at Washington's celebrated Disc Shop. He is also a member of the board of directors of Washington's National Symphony. Here he offers suggestions for interesting people (perhaps yourself) in music.

"One man's short hair is another man's long hair. What's heavy for Harry is light for Louis. In music you can never tell what will appeal to whom. But one thing is certain: Everybody I have ever met is capable of being interested in some kind of music. And most people I meet can be converted from listening to poor music to listening to good music."

So says Dan Danziger, proprietor, proud possessor and chief salesman of the Disc Shop at 1623 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C. The shop is a meeting place for couriers and government employees, Washington society ladies and musicians, diplomats and ambassadors, lieutenants and generals. Within the last ten years it has become one of the most famous record shops in America. People in the business point to Danziger's store as a model of what a service store ought to be. Dan's customers are not easily enticed away from him by price cuts or bargain inducements. Two reasons underlie the customers' fidelity: first, that Danziger's stock of records is large and contains the proper mixture of what people want and of what people don't want—or rather, what they don't know they want but might become interested in; second, because Dan's customers look at him as a personal guide through the land of music.

Danziger started out in life to become a violinist. He got as far as being a fiddler in a symphony orchestra. When he decided that he would rather sell music than play it, he visited all the record shops in town. He asked questions. He found that practically none of the people behind the counter could answer his questions except one young fellow as enthusiastic as Dan himself. He hired him forthwith.

He determined that he was not going to be all things to all people. It would be his attempt to sell good music. That was his love, and he meant to be doing what comes naturally. But what really was this commodity? What is good music? Dan's definition is this: "When I was a kid my teacher was attempting to pacify my rebellion against the playing of the C-major scale. 'You know,' he said patiently, 'when you learn how to play that scale so well that your listener will ask you to repeat it, you will have become an artist.' To me a melody or a musical pattern which produces a new meaning and new satisfaction with each playing is good music. If you want to hear it again, it's good music.

"I'm not such a great musical expert. What I can do is to talk to people about their musical needs. And these, as I said in the beginning, are diverse and manifold. Let's begin with the customer who comes in and asks for 'just some light stuff' or 'music that I can play for relaxation' or 'music during dinner.' He likes Guy Lombardo and Montevani and Melachrino. This customer, my dear readers, is the easiest to convert to better music. He is still timid and a little incredulous that he may enjoy that 'highbrow stuff.' But he has (Please turn to page 263)

THE CRYSTAL AND GOLD DINING ROOM

This dining room is a perfect example of how to enrich the daily life by enriching the common objects and surfaces around us. Everything has been touched with gold and shaped by the hand of the artist. Floor tiles are flecked with gold glaze, wallpaper is printed in gold, crystal dishes and ceiling have gold baked into the crystal. Table legs are solid, polished brass that reflects the floor like a mirror and shines golden beams across it.

Here is a richness equal to that of the Medicis, but it is of our own times, made by contemporary hands, and no longer the exclusive possession of the fabulously wealthy. The idea for the dining room was inspired by the crystal and gold plates of Alice and Richard Petterson, who were asked to repeat the same motif in the glass panels in the skylight. Furniture, wall and floor coverings followed to match.

These tables of stainless steel and plastic-impregnated wood serve many of today's needs. All three can be assembled to form a cocktail table. Each can be used separately for playing games, holding magazines or books, or for eating. Tables are just right height for knees. Being U-shaped, table-top extends over lap without any interference from table-legs.

This circular coffee table has a glass top which allows you to see the interesting forms and patterns made by supporting members. From whatever angle you view the table, as you swing around the living room, the two planes or levels of the wooden supports compose and recompose like abstract sculpture, without, however, any sacrifice of usefulness. All tables are made by the McGuire Company.

Six triangle tables, made of terrazzo by Margaret Bruton, compose a dozen different ways.

Here they compose into diamonds: three diamonds out of six triangles—theme of room.

They compose into an "S" grouping, the heart of which is a parallelogram, usable alone.

the squares of the cushions, the "V's-within-a-square" of the log rest.

In short, the room has a theme—an intricate theme, skillfully played and developed. But it is not repeated to the point of boredom and monotony. So much variety was achieved, within the theme, that lots of people will look at the room and not realize the intricacy, the counterpoint and harmony that went into it.

Few rooms are beautiful in themselves. At best they are usually unobtrusive and depend on us—our own liveliness, our sense of furnishing, decoration and color—for their effect.

But here we have an example of a room that has a vitality and beauty of its own. It is alive, and alive all over. It encourages the same quickened spirit and animation in us. No wall is unresponsive; no surface is dead. Every detail carries interest, yet not so much interest that it interferes with our appreciation and enjoyment of the whole. This is the result of fine design: A theme—here one of triangles and squares—is established and unifies all the parts.

Here is a list of construction materials and furnishings used in "A Room to Be Alone In."

More than that, they were making a conscious effort to produce something beautiful. Their results seem fresh and appealing to our eyes, after the restrictive period too many artists have passed through in the last two decades of blind rule-following and intellectualized designing when beauty was not a goal.

Both of these objects have the curved line in common. Though the curved line is not the sole line of beauty, it is certainly one of which we have been long deprived. We have been seeing too few curves in modern design for several decades. So our eyes take new pleasure in following these curves, and our hands reach for the pleasure of feeling these things. Square blocks and rectilinear lines seem the antithesis of life and beauty because we have had a steady diet of nothing else for so long, and nothing encourages a change in our values like monotony.

PERHAPS the appearance of such notable objects heralds a new design era. Perhaps artists are turning to the organic in life, nature and man. Perhaps our younger artists and designers are too young to remember Victorian floridness that resulted in the revolt that glorified any negation of Victorianism and partly resulted in cubism and its preoccupation with the straight line and the box.

Both the designers of these objects are young. Senungetuk is only eighteen. Sarpaneva is only twenty-eight. They are indeed a new generation, to whom the cubist practitioners must certainly seem like old men, weighed down by their past. They belong to a generation who knows nothing about copying antique ornament, so they have no complexes about ornament in general. Something ornamental must seem quite fresh and new to these young designers coming to maturity at this time. They could very well find in curves infinite unexplored possibilities, for certainly the curve has infinite possibilities of variation, permitting the highest powers of expression.

That eldest young designer working today, Frank Lloyd Wright, now eighty-five, is certainly exploring, exploiting and developing the curve in architecture. (Examples: the V. C. Morris store in San Francisco, the New Guggenheim Museum about to be built in New York City and several private hous completed since the war.) His r cent handling of the spiral and t circle shows that he has reach a new, full phase with this them

Lines, as such, of course, c hardly be called good or bad e cept as they are used. Similar there is neither a good nor a b color except as it is combined w other colors.

The character of a line must ways be considered in context w the other lines in a compositi whether architectural or pictor But, with this reservation in mi it is possible to state that h zontal lines, for instance, give impression of repose. (Frank Ll Wright calls the horizontal li "the line of domesticity.") Verti lines connote dignity and asp tion, as in the spire of a cathed

Crooked lines are suggestive activity, even conflict, but cur lines—the lines we are most terested in here—according esthetician DeWitt Parker, "h always been recognized as soft voluptuous and tender, as in reggio and Renoir. The supposi that the curved line is the sole of beauty' [Hogarth's point view] is the result of a narrow effeminate idea of the esthetic; it must be admitted that this fo since it permits of the grea amount of variation, has the hig power of expression; and in n of its more complex varietie loses much of its soft femi quality and takes on some of strength of the other forms."

Another philosopher of bea Ellen Key, has gone so far a write, "All warmth, all moven all love is round, or at least . . . Only the cold, immovable different, and hateful is str and square . . . Life is round, death is angular."

THIS is certainly an impassi plea for the curve and only fact that we too have been jected to an inordinately long anny of the straight, machine line and box-like form make appreciate the truth in this sionate exaggeration. We known the monotony of the str line; we now welcome the and falling of the curve, the like shape of a flame that ap in the vase we admired on 202. Our eye has great, starved, pleasure in followin new curvilinear forms.

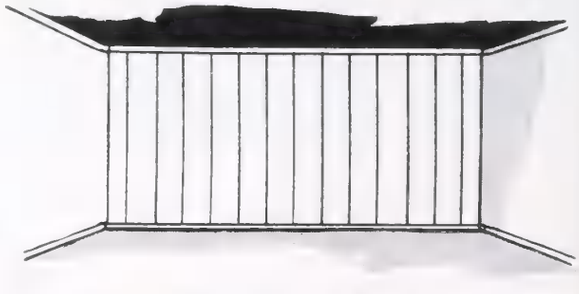
How to put up

A New Paintable Wall for 7½¢ a square foot



The new narrow gypsum panels, with easy-to-handle joints, make it easy to cover old unsightly walls

Here is such a wall in the Scandinavian-American dining room. Note nice pattern made by joints.

One of the rooms in the Exhibition of "The Arts of Daily Living" uses the new install-it-yourself gypsum panels. They merit your investigation because they offer more ease of application by laymen, thanks to the fact that the joints are supposed to show and make a decorative pattern. The panel's light weight and accommodating dimensions are likewise a boon to amateurs. Furthermore, the cost is very advantageous, the manufacturer's literature is clear, and panels come plain or striated.

So many systems calling for a plying sheets of wallboard ov old walls get the amateur i trouble because the joints are s posed to be hidden. Only skil workers can achieve the finesse quired to bring this about. Th new, narrow panels of "Sheetro require no such skill, since joints are planned to be expo and so create interesting shad lines. The narrow width (16 inch permits enough of these lines occur, even in small rooms, to architecturally interesting.

Narrowness of 16" panel means shadow pattern occurs many times, even in a short run of wall. When panels are bigger only a few shadows exist, results look botched.

anufacturer of "Sheetrock" panels kes special tools for spreading ce- nt properly over panels. It pays follow closely printed directions.

ittle tricks of "know-how" are in- uded in the instruction sheet, such how to carry cement from one panel the next, without removing spreader.

preading cement on filler pieces, nar- wer than 16", requires a special nar- wer spreader. One ribbon of cement necessary on panels up to 6".

Truing up each board as it is pplied is necessary for beginner. his is done by using a carpenter's vel, pressed against side of panel. d rooms are likely not to be umb, so the first board applied the corner is crucial. For this is the place where the correction would have to be made to keep you from having a mess on your hands when you finish up at the other end of the wall.

Small corrections at the beginning corner, called for by straightening the plumb, can be covered later with quarter round moldings. The same applies to where the panel meets the ceiling. Where it is necessary to hold the top edge of the panel tightly against the ceiling, a 4d nail can be used, as close to the ceiling as possible. Later the row of nail holes can be covered with quarter round moldings or similar trim.

Also important is that panels have close contact with each other. This is accomplished by using a 2 x 4 to impact the leading edge of the last, previously-laid panel, so it is evenly forced up against its neighbor. After doing this, check the plumb with the carpenter's level.

Only precaution: Keep face of the panels dry, cement-free.

s material is ideal to give a oth paintable surface over a ked or bulging plaster wall. Old ster must be reasonably sound.

New storage solutions for bedrooms

Twenty drawers in six different sizes and two bottom cabinets give you almost made-to-measure storage space for anything from a collar button to a blanket, yet so much function occupies a mere 22½" of wall space, 8½" of floor. This all occurs in John Widdicomb's stylish fruitwood and brass-knobbed version of the old cobbler's chest, a piece that's adaptable to any kind of setting.

A blanket console, with an adjustable shelf and a tray drawer, is roomy enough to store the household supply of comforters and blankets, and tall enough to give the room a usable extra surface at convenient dresser height. Made of limed oak, lined and shelved with fragrant cedar, it could be as effectively placed in a living room or hall as in a bedroom. Made by The Lane Co., Inc.

Gallic elegance accents Drexel's Touraine dining room . . . softened by gentle curves and carvings with the look of time-mellowed sculpture.

Now... the New Improved

3 STAR HEATILATOR FIREPLACE

THE new 3-Star Heatilator Fireplace is the only fireplace designed especially for the modern home. It gives you cozy warmth and smokeless operation when a fire is burning. Then when the fireplace is not in use, you are protected from the loss of house heat up the chimney or from down-drafts that chill the room.

Warms all the room. Cool air from floor level is warmed in the double walled firebox of the Heatilator unit — then circulates gently to every corner of the room, even adjoining rooms. Provides extra comfort from heat formerly wasted up the chimney.

Will not smoke. A scientifically design form for the masonry, the Heatilator unit does away with guess-work and rule-of-thumb construction methods. Savings in labor and materials make the finished Heatilator Fireplace cost little more than old-fashioned construction.

New pressure-seal damper. The new Pressure-Seal Damper is found only in the 3-Star Heatilator unit. Actually seals the chimney throat air-tight when the fireplace is not in use. No costly house heat escapes up the chimney. No chimney down-drafts can cause cold drafts in the room. And in the fully air-conditioned home, it is an absolute necessity to prevent loss of expensive summer cooling as well as winter warmth.

The Fireplace for Every Purpose . . .

Ideal for homes, basement rooms, camps or cabins. But be sure you get the genuine. Look for the name Heatilator on the damper handle and dome. Ask your building material dealer, or mail coupon now for free booklet.

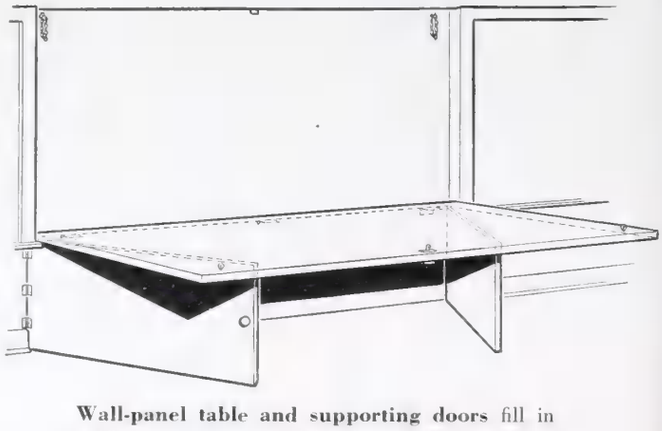
A disappearing children's play table



A hinged panel drops out of a shallow niche in the wall of this nursery and becomes a broad, child-height play table which takes up floor space only when it's being used. For the rest of the time it folds flat and inconspicuously into the wall. Table is supported by a pair of doors which also open out. A good idea that could be added to any existing wall. Hinged at a higher level, it would make a good adult work surface.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Wall-panel table and supporting doors fill in a 3"-deep recess created by the installation of two blackboards. Panel is 1⅝" thick, the same thickness as a stock flush door which, incidentally, could be used for a built-in like this. Panel snaps to the wall with clip catches when not used as a table.

This terrazzo-topped cocktail table by Margaret Bruton proves that art need not be limited to easel painting or to sculpture on a pedestal, but can enter the home in many ways. $400.

imagine how the interior design affects the exterior appearance of the house containing the particular room you are looking at. (We show you the whole house from one of our living rooms, on page 208.) Once you can look at an interior with these eyes, you can really see architecture as too few, whether professionals or amateurs, have ever learned to see it: inside out.

And as you look for art in these rooms, look at everything; not only the paintings, but also the fabrics; not only the sculpture, but also the furniture; not only the mosaics in a wall, but also the pattern of the stone work of the wall itself. Then look at the art of bringing all these elements together so that they flatter each other without any loss in their own separate distinction.

Finally, analyze for yourself how the art of furnishing a room must show complete understanding of, and sympathy for, the art of the architecture of that room.

What are we really saying, then? Nothing more than this: Art is a word. Only you can bring it to life. It can be calligraphy, but it must not be limited to calligraphy. It is painting, of course, but it is more than painting, too. It can be everything around you, just as you can be an artist in every moment of living, simply by capturing the rhythm and pattern of each moment in life. Santayana called this "the gift of finding immediate joy in the obvious."

Perhaps most of the adults who attend evening classes in art appreciation have never heard of Santayana, but one of them, at least, according to that remarkable teacher, Hughes Mearns, had experienced for herself the essence of Santayana's attitude. Here i what she wrote during one ev ning's session in a sudden burst awareness:

"Pictures? Well, it really doesn matter about pictures," she wrot "because there is so much else.

"Art and art appreciation hav always been tied up with painting galleries and museums, but now see them as part of everything from watching the skylight in m white-walled living room chang from hour to hour, to taking cris bunches of water cress, radish and bright orange carrots fro their oilskin pouches in the r frigerator.

"It is astonishing and unbelie able," she concluded with wond "that I should have come this f in life without seeing—really se ing—anything which was famili because of its very familiarity."

An eye for the new beauty American life must be alert to sculptural character of the bes today's furniture, which this c by Wharton Esherick represe

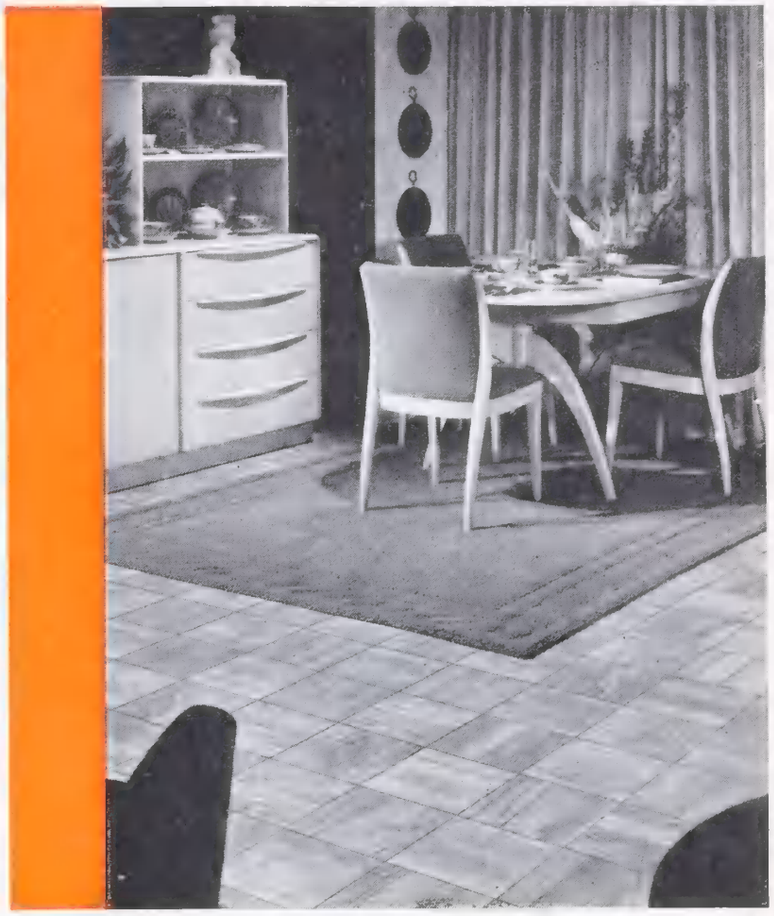
Here is a close-up of the tile mural by Jean Ames for the dining room on page 216. Designed for this room, it is nonetheless as distinct a work of art as a fine print. $200.

This woman now enjoys art unimited. She sees it in the setting f her table, in the line of a cup r the glaze of a vase, in the turn f an arm or a leg of a chair, in he weave of a carpet, in the colors nd textures of an embroidery. She s now free to enjoy the flowering f all forms of artistry and craftsnanship.

Thus she is alive to the wonders f our time and our world, for it is n all these that we are virtually nexcelled. The potters of southern alifornia show a mastery of their naterial that makes the potters of outhern France surface decorators f baked clay, more painters than eramists. And the work of the Natzlers of California is on display n the Los Angeles County Fair Exhibition to prove it.

Our mosaicists too are bringing a new vitality to an ancient technique and are incorporating Byzantine brilliance with contemporary usefulness and freshness of feeling. The same upsurge is occurring in enamel and metal work. (Look closely at the enameled dishes on the tables, as well as the art on the walls; study the new, handsome log-rests in the fireplaces; catch the silversmithing in the plumbing fixtures and in the furniture.)

ome of America's finest artistry to be found in ceramics, as stified here by this jar, by a ung student, Ho. Note how fitg are ornament and form.



Whether it is in new materials, such as Lucite and stainless steel, or classic materials, such as terra cotta and tile, there is a great, bustling activity that tempts one to compare it to the Italian Renaissance, when artists like Cellini made bronze statues or silver wine goblets as the fancy or the commission moved them.

Why limit art to the paint brush or the chisel? Hasn't Alexander Calder shown that a welding torch too can create a new kind of art, in his case, mobiles? And why limit our appreciation of art to oil on canvas or to pieces of chiseled marble? If we do, we only limit ourselves and our field of enjoyment. We will yearn for Giotto and be blind to Frank Lloyd Wright. We will be like the little boy who looked and looked for the Wishing Gate, but when he came to it, didn't recognize it at all. He just climbed on it and sadly wished he could find the Wishing Gate.

"Give me insight into today," Emerson said, "and you may have the antique world."

it is very exciting, indeed) is a walk through the rooms of this exhibition. That's a statement that risks ridicule, but we'll run the risk of it. There are many, many things in the world finer than anything we have yet created, but there are those of us who would rather share in the birth of a new beauty, we might call it a new American beauty, than be spectators of the old. For being a lover of beauty is not enough: you must somehow share in its birth, when it may not even look very beautiful. Otherwise your love of beauty is somewhat dead.

And what is the new American beauty like? Like little else! "Beauty will not repeat in Americ its history in Greece." Emerso prophesied for us. "It is in va that we look for genius to reitera its miracles in the old arts: it its instinct to find beauty and ho ness in new and necessary fac in the field and roadside, in t shop and mill.

"Beauty must come back to t useful arts," he wrote earli "and the distinction between t fine and the useful arts be f gotten."

So Emerson lectured us. But t new American beauty is no long something to be wished for. It here: the Exhibition before y simply mirrors and records it.

The new American beauty is in everything we touch: the mosaic tile of a counter, the fine forms of our hardware fixtures and table appointments. This silver by Allan Adler.

It should bring out interesting textures that might be missed. It should create friendly pools of light in large, cavernous rooms.

In rooms whose main daytime interest is the outside view (through walls of glass) nighttime interest has to be achieved through lighting, or the rooms become dull and flat and "fall apart" (the glass turns into black holes and black mirrors). So the lighting artist-engineer works with the architect and decorator to give the room at night as much interest as it has by day.

Though good lighting cannot change a bad interior into a good one, it can bring a good one to final perfection. Conversely, the creative, glamorous interior can l lost in drabness by a poor ligh ing plan.

All this emphasis on the architecture of your home, its furnishings, color scheme, garden around it and food served in it are indicative of your philosophy of daily living, and you have made an art of it. It is not Oriental, nor is it European: it is strictly your American contribution to the world.

If so many of you Americans I've talked to seem unaware of this contribution, it should be no surprise to you when we Europeans are blind to it. But there are those, like Senora Maria Caturla, who see it. They are the exception.

In Europe I still hear people saying that everything in America (which they have never seen) is alike, that women open cans only and do not know how to cook, that women spend the better part of their day gossiping with friends, shopping in department stores, drinking cocktails. They say that the American male puts his feet on the desk in his office, drinks excessively with "the boys," belongs to a dozen clubs with imbecile names, slaps people's backs and is suspicious of everyone intellectual. That the children are brats and morons ruined by mollycoddling mothers and bloodcurdling TV, radio, and film whodunits, wreck the trains and buses going to and back from school and wreck their schools to boot, read only monosyllabic ta in comic books, lack manners a respect for grownups.

They say that the Americ home is crammed to the attic w ugly, plushy, overstuffed furnit but is completely devoid of g paintings on the walls, books, a other signs of an advanced civ zation . . . that the houses are u either because they are too c temporary or too old-fashioned that anyway they all look alike that all apartments are teneme filled to the brim with Skid R bums, while the streets abou with jalopies and explode w fermenting trash cans which s their contents over the drunks the gutter, on the sidewalks that when you come to Amer you realize the meaning of cult because of the absence of it . .

Etcetera, etcetera and not v far from the truth in many sh ing instances. The material u by sociologists, just ordinary ics of America, journalists, pho raphers and others is genuine is furnished by America Americans themselves. Now, may ask, what would be wr with a presentation of the o side of the picture by more fri like the gracious lady from S who kept her eyes open? Why the good American home? there must be such a one. If t were not, how then could the on continue to win wars, to give eely of its abundant wealth that eeps coming out of the pockets of e individual taxpayer? How uld all the growth and progress every human field that, above l, characterize the United States possible if its homes were all ad? A home is not just an archi-ct's creation, a mere domicile. It the individuals who live in it no make it a home.

A highly skilled expert may be le to identify a Goya, a Rem-andt or an El Greco by just oking at a far end corner of the inting. A foreigner, however, can ver understand the United States nply by riding a jeep on the ads of the U.S. He will not un-rstand the gigantic continent by ing to find Staten Island in the escope on top of the Empire te Building. Not any more than understand France by visiting Left Bank dives.

So why not the American home? good home which is not just ection of the picture but a cross-tion of life in the United States. ere else but there is the com-te stranger welcomed as a nd to sit down on the floor of eautiful home in San Francisco discuss with university profes-s, doctors, dentists, business-n, authors and artists the cul-l problems of today, matters vorld policy and domestic poli-business, babies and the ding of a new wing to some-s house? I know because it re-lly happened to me on a tour took me this time to New k, the New York area, Boston, e Cod, Virginia, Texas and ral towns in Arizona and Cali-ia.

EMEMBER, now that I am me in my native Sweden, the ming wife of a wealthy insur-man in Pasadena, California. was the mother of five—which ne would believe. No make-up he one she was born with. She the children to school and to riding lessons. Gardens ex-herself. Did all the cooking the eighteen-months old baby nded most of her time. es immaculately in Schiapa-clothes and in dresses she s herself. She does not go ing but orders over the tele-e. "If I see things, I know it ost more." Her husband man-to put in a respectable nt of work around the house. gether they painted a good of the interiors of the ram-six-room structure which is ully decorated with modern furniture, was designed by a modern architect, but altered and improved upon according to their own sound ideas.

She has three boys who read her French fashion magazines. She thinks it will give them good taste. Since there is no sex education in their school (all four of her older children go to a private co-educational school), she allows them to come into the bathroom when she dresses. If and when they have any questions, she answers them. All four get up early and make their own beds. The oldest boy got a record player for Christmas complete with Beethoven and "South Pacific" so as to know the difference. The big house has two servants, the second one made necessary by the baby.

I THINK with affection of another housewife in Pasadena who works on the League of Women Voters, Institutional Care for the Negro Child, as well as a couple of other organizations. She received me with the usual, heart-warming hospitality in the experimental house she occupies with her husband and a divorced, young daughter. The architect's plans were changed considerably by this family. "His kitchen was okay for a can-opener cook but I am not that kind." She devotes six hours a week to committee work, does all the laundry, cleans the house every day for, as she said, she feels that "if the modern house is not hospital clean, it looks unsanitary."

I remember fondly the young architect in Bel Air who buys records with the piano parts missing so that he can play quartets with the records on the grand piano, on which his children also practice. He and his family of four I found in the best neighborhood imaginable. The women sew, make their own and their daughters' dresses. His wife is his full-time secretary. Their house has eight rooms.

Along my route there were a dozen or so housewives who said that they did not use frozen foods. They were, however, free from prejudice against them. "We will try them some day soon," they said.

I met others who said they used almost nothing but frozen foods because they had found out what their many advantages are.

I met those who had hung a Picasso reproduction where it belonged and a Ben Shahn, a Tamayo or Mondrian in equally good light. I met those who did not show off their libraries but allowed me to roam the house till I could satisfy my urge for good books, sometimes found on shelves in the living room or more often in a room set especially aside for the family's huge collection of world literature.

THE MEANING OF AMERICA

The homes I saw were the homes of music lovers. Of the more than thirty I visited not one lacked a grand piano. There were hi-fi systems and extensive record collections in almost all of them. There were well-stocked pantries, sometimes containing preserves made by the housewife who could be an editor, an author, an art teacher or a journalist.

I marvelled at the space set aside for storage of cleaning utensils, soap, light-bulbs, canned goods. I marvelled at the abundance of bathrooms—never less than two—the space reserved for the children, the spaciousness of the homes, the planning behind them done by the owners, the planning for a future, better, home.

My notes tell me about the woman in Claremont, California, who runs a home of five vast rooms with the help of a cleaning woman who comes in once a week. (This was the pattern in most cases.) She had a sewing machine in her bedroom and work in progress on it, two boys of 11 and 14 at home, two more children in college, an indoor, tropical garden and one of the most exquisitely beautiful homes I have ever seen anywhere in the world. A lived-in art museum.

THERE was the young lady in Los Angeles who had more than 30 cookbooks in her kitchen. She does secretarial work for her husband who built part of the house himself. The major part of it is 35 years old. It has ten rooms, two baths. They have one baby, but they are both very young. "Our next house will be contemporary," she said with strong conviction. "This is not the kind of house you can go contemporary in. In the next one we will be able to express ourselves."

I did not meet one single Helen Hokinson type of woman, although I spoke to many who could teach a professional gardener many a useful thing about Viburnum hedges, the pink Helen Traubel rose, the Floradora, Jacaranda trees, the fuchsia bush and where lavender properly belongs.

I encountered no sign of ugly Philip Wylie "Momism." The ones I met out of America's millions of housewives had found, as Frank Lloyd Wright wrote recently, that with the arrival of the open plan "the housewife, thus planned for, became the central figure in her menage and her housewifery, a more charming feature (according to her ability) of her domestic establishment. She was now more hostess 'officio', operating in gracious relation to her own home, instead of being a kitchen-mechanic behind closed doors."

The men I met were not the back-slapping type. One was a New York millionaire who built and repaired things for the house at a workbench in his study; a Los Angeles interior decorator smartly operated a lathe in his garage. Most of them could read blueprints and draft architectural plans. The youths were well mannered, inquisitive, and remarkably free from preconceived ideas.

The residential areas outside the big cities were, of course, models of cleanliness, traffic safety and spaciousness.

I found none of the women that Mary Petty so lovingly caricature none of the caricatures that Rob john-Gibbings so merrily spra with vitriol in his "Homes of t Brave." With servants almost tota ly unavailable, labor and buildin costs what they are, with inflatio schools a problem, an impressi amount of entertaining, committ work and all kinds of everyda worries, many an American hous wife realized that, to have thin done well, she must do them he self. Her husband did too. Th children likewise. Through peac ful evolution a revolutionary chan began to take place.

There is still a long way to g for several millions. The result an impressive amount of cases however, already a home whic breaths freedom and relaxati throughout, regardless of all th work behind the scene.

TO US Europeans the homes saw in all parts of America visited now and six years ago a identical with a high level of lux rious living. The glistening ba rooms, the big kitchen, the appet ing breakfast rooms, the util rooms, garages, gardens with sp lights, swimming pools, smo ovens, barbecues are timesave comfort-creators, nerve-soothers,

To own all this is beyond reach f most of us, even though we may e on a comparable income level. Much of it was built by the hus-ands and wives themselves. Why would there be such a market for ooks and magazine articles on ow to do it, if so many Americans id not use their hands and their open-minded, rational brains?

Well, there is my report on my trip across your country. I advise all my countrymen to try to take the same trip. I've even gone so far as to advise some Americans to do it too. Most Europeans and too many Americans are ignorant of the America they talk so much about.

f big name artists like Picasso and latisse, you'll be amazed at how easonably priced is the work of sser-known but fine artists.

Creativity in your home, how-er, depends more on how crea-vely you spend your money than what art objects you buy. You ust learn how to shop for bar-ins at sales and auctions, in cond-hand shops and so-called ea Markets; where to go to get mponents that you can assemble urself and thus save money.

If you decorate and furnish with is type of imagination, you can it for less money, because the tinction and originality of your rangements will more than com-nsate for the lower-priced pieces u use. This way you bring in-viduality to your rooms, even ough they are completely fur-hed with inexpensive things.

There are other secrets to suc-ss: making a few big, beautiful essories count rather than count-il on many small, cluttered-to-her objects; keeping to a dis-lined color scheme, even though ur purchases are made at widely ttered intervals; finding inex-nsive ways of giving architectural erest to your boxy rooms that wl elevate them to an elegance ually found only in the finest itecture.

Creative purchasing applies to cooking, remodeling, gardening—everything. It applies to furnishing and decorating. It means:

1. Buying things that, in themselves, are perfectly typical and usual but which you use in a fresh way with other perfectly ordinary and readily available merchandise.

2. Buying in second-hand stores, junk shops, auctions and heaven knows where unusual objects for use in your home (carved ornaments for door pulls or headboards, old Spanish iron chandeliers which you break down into their parts for table bases, etc.).

3. Buying components in standard sizes and dimensions for non-standard uses (concrete blocks used as planters or plant stands; slab doors for table tops, etc.).

4. Having creative artists and artisans make things for your home: custom cabinetry inspired by your own needs and ideas; floor coverings designed to match a favorite tapestry or embroidery; cast plaster grilles to filter light through a window.

Simply by spending your money creatively and so encouraging industrial designers, craftsmen, artists and artisans, you experience the joy and fun of having new beauty around you daily—your own brand of personal beauty!

Natural rose-hued Kaibab Stone flagging paves both living room and terrace, continuing outside through glass doors, uniting both areas as one visual entity. Indoors it is waxed to a pleasant easy-to-maintain patina with Trewax flagstone wax. Color of the viscose-nylon rug, keyed to the ruddiness of stone, furthers the illusion of space.

And could you imagine the clearly defined study and dining areas successfully put to any other use?

There is no such restriction in this family room where all areas flow together and can flow apart as needed, where the furniture might be changed and rearranged ad infinitum without marring the room's atmosphere of elegant repose.

And elegant it unquestionably is, made so by the innate elegance of the simplest materials—stone, wood and glass—in the hands of an architect who perceives in them their natural-born richness of texture and pattern, using them in ways to make these qualities sing "high C." See the subtle, vertical pattern of wood graining "lifting" the ceiling height, see its satiny sheen come to life as it is struck by light from above. See the pale-mottling of earth colors in sandstone slabs, laid horizontally as nature built them in the quarry, see the luxurious warmth of stone texture as it contrasts with wood in a pattern created by the interplay of planes. These are endlessly lovely refinements, needing no other ornament. And from the practical viewpoint, they are tough, rugged, nearly everlasting.

The room is truly American, springing out of the kind of informal life that is led only in our country in our time. But its richness and spaciousness appeal t traditionalists, too. It has a grai deur born of the soaring thrust o its upper walls and its high, sk lighted ceiling. As in a great hal light from above and consequen changing shadow-play are as in trinsic a part of its noble patter as the texture and grain of its ma terials.

But this is grandeur gently su dued to human scale by subt changes in proportions of ceilin and wall heights, so that the si of the room, far from dwarfing i occupants in body or spirit, r laxes them, encouraging the fr and easy movements of living.

The family room and barbecu patio were created out of the fo lowing materials and furnishing

How does woodworker and furniture designer George Nakashima—and other artists and artisans—manage to achieve such distinction and quality as in the fine, sculptured pieces we have shown on pages 174 and 175, for as little, in this case, as $60 a chair and $150 a table? (After you compare these prices with those of equally fine chairs, presumably manufactured in quantity, you'll share the same welcome surprise.)

WHEN a piece of furniture is done by hand, rather than by a machine, the woodworker personally decides how a particular board should be used, how best to shape it, how best to bring out the nature of its grain and its color. In other words, no two pieces, as a result, are identical. Each varies from the other and thus each is unique.

The same is true in other fields of fine craftsmanship. The hand-thrown pot, for instance, is shaped and glazed individually according to its particular composition and special purpose. It is often one of a kind and bears the design-imprint of its artist-potter. It never gives you the impression that it is one of many emerging from the end of a conveyor belt.

Similarly with the work of weavers and mosaicists, whose number is steadily increasing across the country. They too offer distinctive and highly individual things for the home, each with the character of its creator, each with a sensitive and personal reaction to its special materials and tools.

For many things, of course, the machine product is ideal. No one, for example, would want to return to hand-weaving all cloth or handcrafting an automobile. It would be absurd and absurdly unnecessary. However, one of our major problems today is how to achieve individuality in our homes and at the same time take advantage of the benefits of mass production. Part of the answer is this: Add to your home the work of artists and craftsmen; let their personally created objects give your interior a touch of individuality that no machine product can.

Have a handcrafted chair or vase, a hand-woven tapestry or a hand-done embroidery among your other furnishings, and suddenly you arrive at warmth and personality in your home, even though most of what you possess is the impersonal product of an efficient machine. To show how this can be done is one of the most important reasons for HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S creation of this Exhibition.

It should not be surprising that the work of an artist has uniqueness, but what does surprise many people is the fact that it is often no more expensive than a similar work turned out by machine and in quantity.

THERE are a number of reasons why this is so, but most important is the realization that it is the case very often. When you commission a portrait, say, from a fairly well-established artist, you will find frequently that he charges you less for it than he does for one of his paintings. (You benefit thus from your initiative and his appreciation for it.) This, we have found, is also true of work ordered from hand-weavers, tile-mosaicists and other creators of useful beauty.

If you haven't discovered this for yourself, you have a wonderful discovery to make: The handcrafted object needn't cost more. There is one further discovery: When it costs more, it is worth it, if it is the work of a true artist.

Let's let woodworker George Nakashima's expression of his feeling about his chosen material, wood, indicate what we mean by the true artist:

"To help in the installation of natural forms in our environment," he says, "I have chosen wood as a material, warm and personal, with many moods from which one can choose. . . . The character and history of a wide plank of walnut recreates the life and death of 200 years. The story of bitter winters and the searing desert summers of at least a human lifetime shows in the twisted, tortured forms of bitterbrush; the story of a way of life speaks in the beautiful, wide, unvarnished boards of a tea-house ceiling."

When you include in your home the work of such a man, with so great a love for his materials, you also enrich it with a spirit and beauty, a tranquillity and excitement that only a supreme craftsman can bring you. Whether it is wood or stone, clay or wool, the attitude of such a craftsman is revealed in his work. It is wonderful that you can have it at all: it's a miracle that it needn't cost more.

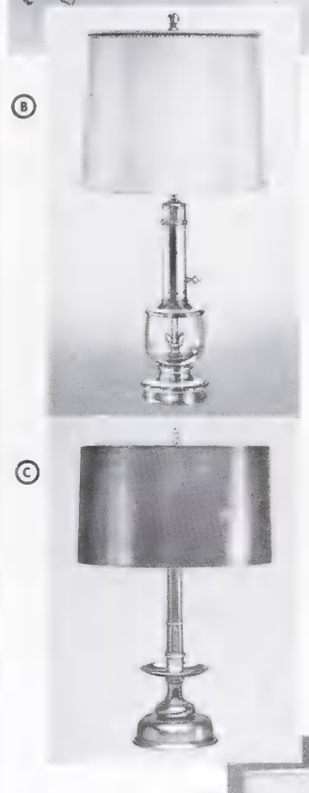
perienced the pleasure of good und: he knows instinctively the eetness that lies in the sweep massed violins; he has, so to eak, touched the sensuous texture music. To him I suggest an alm of Strauss Waltzes, then a cording of the Scheherazade or riabin's Poem of Ecstasy, and in short time a good high-fidelity cording of Richard Strauss's lome's Dance or Don Juan. This stomer is similar to the lady who es the Warsaw Concerto and to om I sell first the Grieg Conto, later Beethoven's Emperor ncerto, and still later several of Mozart concertos.

"My customers range from white-red gentlemen with pince-nez who think that nothing worth while in music has been composed since Mozart, to earnest young girls carrying a book by Faulkner who feel that all must be modern and that the dark age of music lies before Bartok. But we are speaking here of the beginners, and three out of four people who are beginning to like music start with romantic music. That means Grieg, Tchaikovsky, Rimski-Korsakov, Chopin, Wagner, some Debussy and perhaps some of the early Stravinsky.



"Most of the beginners have heard, though they might not be able to name the music by its title, Debussy's The Afternoon of a

Faun, Chopin's Minute Waltz, and Tchaikovsky's Andante Cantabile. There is deep satisfaction in introducing this client, used to a little lush music, to something grander and broader, though still romantic. On his next visit I show him Beethoven's Appassionata Sonata, and most likely he will recall the movie in which this sonata was played by Rubinstein.

"My method of converting people to good music is therefore a method of suggestion of similars. The appetite grows by what it feeds on. Careful 'programming' will guide the customer from one to another. The first thing I do is to find out what kind of music he is at present interested in. I do this by friendly, unhurried conversation. Then I begin to suggest, taking care not to go too fast. A music lover who accepts Schubert and Schumann and even Mozart and Beethoven may require a year or two before a Bach Brandenburg Concerto is mentioned. It may not 'take' at once, but by patient auditioning the mystery of Bach will unfold itself.

"I try to widen my customer's horizon of music by 'association' items. I'm speaking now of those who already like music but whose tastes are rather departmentalized. If his chief interest is opera (more and more people who come into my store nowadays seem to be opera fans), I steer him to other great vocal music, particularly masses or requiems. I suggest the Verdi Requiem, that magnificent work which, religious though it is, bears a certain affinity to opera.

"If a classicist is about ready to consider the existence of modern music, I show him that Shostakovitch in his Fifth Symphony took a theme which is almost identical to that of the main melody in the last movement of Beethoven's Seventh.

"Once I have the customer sufficiently interested to listen, then the music will speak for itself. Indeed, demonstrating music is the only good way to convince and to engender enthusiasm. Sometimes a customer will reject my choice violently. But quite as often I sense that he'll become interested after a second or third hearing. All music can't be loved at once. A good thing, too. Loves, slow in ripening, last longer.

"I have certain favorite demonstration records. These are my best salesmen. For example: If I want to introduce somebody to Bach, I play the Sonata in E for Harpsichord and Violin in the Landowska and Menuhin recording. It is melodious and charming. If I am ready to embark on my favorite subject, the fun of chamber music, I use as a demonstration Mozart's Quartet No. 493, played by Szell and the Budapest Quartet. Among the symphonies, I demonstrate three (you might guess which they are): Beethoven's Fifth, Dvorak's New World Symphony (both recorded by Toscanini) and Tchaikovsky's Fifth, recorded by Ormandy.

"Fortunately I can count on much help (unpaid) in my crusade to convert people to music. The radio, and especially good music stations, play their part. I know this because every so often somebody will come in and say, 'I heard this piece last night over the air and I would like to hear it again.' The record reviewers help. Our concerts of the National Symphony here in Washington create much interest in new music. But the biggest influence on music is still, believe it or not, Hollywood. The artists who have appeared in movies—Iturbi, Rubinstein, Lanza—have contributed a measurable share in the creation of serious musical interest in the United States. For their efforts every music store in the country is forever grateful. From a daily observation, it is pleasing to me to note that the name Toscanini has become as revered by youngsters as Mickey Mantle, and the Maestro's picture is as well known by this group as that of Montgomery Clift.

"Finally, let me say that I have made it a rule with myself and with my associates in the store never to force our tastes on others. We must not be didactic or snobbish. Not so long ago a woman came in and asked for 'the Polonaise played by Chopin.' I didn't smile. She may not know that Chopin is dead, but she knows that his music is alive."

love for your materials, a tender concern for their essential quality. And this, in my book, involves an appreciation of what's inside tins, jars and packages from the chain store, as well as that solicitous understanding of a fine French Roquefort cheese which prompts you to take it out of the refrigerator and leave it at room temperature several hours before dinner.

A knowledge of your tools is equally important. Any artist must be acquainted with the capabilities of her stove. Ask enough but not too much of your appliances. Know, for instance, that your electric blender will do a most extraordinary job of beating whole eggs or egg yolks, but will irrevocably ruin egg whites, and churn rather than whip thick cream. Know your knives too, the right one for the right work, and treat them with the utmost respect.

Last, and perhaps greatest of all, is the element of imagination—a lively curiosity, creativity, and intention which, let's hope, remains always this side of zany.

Enjoy Yourself

There is so much that is variable and personal in the arts of the table. Only one thing is certain: there must be the element of joy. If you don't enjoy eating, probably you won't enjoy cooking, and if you don't like cooking it will never become an art for you, no matter how deft, skillful or experienced you may be. So cultivate this joy. Don't attempt too much. Don't get too tired. Don't leave yourself open too often to chances of failure. Don't get bogged down by drudgery. Make things as easy for yourself as possible. Cook in your own way, at your own pace.

Some people, particularly visitors from abroad, deplore the mechanical aids in our kitchens and what they term our addiction to the freezer and the can opener. They are convinced that our "standardized" foods must kill creativity. Happily it isn't working that way. An epicure of the old school asks with some scorn: "What do you women do with all the time you save with your mixes and mixers?" I can't answer for all women, but, as for me, I cook the things I love to cook. I make my own bread because I can't buy any in my town that really suits me and my family. I go to quite a lot of trouble to order by mail different kinds of stone-ground flour. I make homemade ice cream, too, in a freezer with a dasher for the children to lick, and I don't find that the quality is a bit different now that we use electric rather than small-boy power to turn the crank.

But I can't be bothered making my own consommé. I use a chicken concentrate, instant pudding, piecrust, popover and hot roll mixes.

On occasion, however, I will make puff paste—quantities of it to put in the freezer, and croissants and brioche. Even Fettuccini! Because only with these noodles freshly made and undried, can I achieve a dish that rivals the one we ate in Rome made by the Original Alfredo—the king of Fettuccini.

Some people like to fuss with food. Others are happiest when they can achieve their effects with a few bold dramatic strokes. It's the difference between the miniature and the mural painter.

The psychologists tell us that happiness is a by-product of doing something well. Often you will come to enjoy certain jobs once you have achieved the necessary deftness. You must decide for yourself how much of the slow, small, time-taking jobs you can put up with, without allowing them to rob you of the joy of cooking. Perhaps as you become more and more alive to the fine points of great eating, you will find yourself more and more willing to take on the so-called drudgery. Or you may become less patient—hunt high and low for the short-cuts. One thing is certain: The true artists in the kitchen can never accept any short-cut that involves a compromise with quality.

The Fitness of Food

The classic unities of time, place and action are as important to the gourmet as to the dramatist. The most delicate aspic in all of Paris would be nothing but snobbish nonsense served to a group of hungry hunters on a cold fall evening in the north woods. This is an extreme case, of course, but the principle involved is the same whenever you plan a meal or present a dish. Only if you relate food to a setting and to a person, present a perfect nectarine, for instance, on a green leaf, set on a crystal plate with a mother-of-pearl fruit knife, then and then only it becomes art.

Because so many factors are involved, because no occasion is ever quite the same as any other, it is almost impossible to compose ahead of time the Perfect Menu. You must have in mind the pattern of a menu, but your party will never quite come off unless it is the result of a highly personal improvisation. You must be flexible, always adapting, changing, perfecting.

Throughout the centuries, the French and Italians have developed a wonderful sense of the fitness of food: country foods for the country, sea dishes for the coast. Some classicists will not touch any fruit or vegetable except in its own season. At the opposite pole are those who can appreciate strawberries only in the winter.

But here in America the world is our garden. Our airplanes, refrigerators, freezers and processers halt the march of the seasons, but only to an extent. We still have much to learn about the appreciation of each food at its peak. We have only begun to overcome our provincial disdain for those things which are common, plentiful and regional. There are signs, however, that this may be the next step in America's awakening to a consciousness of her own great food traditions. Already we are beginning to collect and treasure regional recipes. We are acquiring a new respect for local delicacies.

An Egg and You

A lively living art, cooking has much in common with the visual and plastic arts, and so the practitioner of the gastronomic arts must be deeply concerned with the materials of the craft. If you're going to attempt an omelet or fry an egg, make a soufflé, a cake or a sauce suprême, there must be a kind of understanding between the egg and you. You must be aware of its basic character, its dislike for high temperatures, the daffodil gold that the yolk takes on after proper beating, the stubborn refusal of whites to mount when they are too chilled, or when there's even a trace of yolk or grease in the bowl, the curdling anger of an egg when, in defiance of all rites, the egg has been added to the hot sauce instead of vice versa.

When you become an artist, this kind of knowledge is a part of you —so much a part you will have forgotten you ever learned it. Almost instinctively you will accommodate your methods and your recipes to the material at hand. If you have infant vegetables, fresh out of the garden, perhaps you'll serve them raw in a great bowl, with nothing but Malden salt crystals, or a dip of sour cream, or you'll cook them to the briefest possible moment in the least possible water, in the simplest possible way. Showing off the wonder of them!

But if it's winter time in the city, you'll spare yourself the bother of searching out what passes for fresh green beans. Far better to use the best in a tin or frozen package and cook them, let's say, in the Armenian fashion, with tomatoes and eggplant, or à la Provençal in olive oil with onions, garlic and a touch of anchovy. Such sensitivity to your raw materials is crucial.

Tools of your Craft

Without tools, cooking could never have progressed even as far as the charred meat stage. It's no shame to feel dependent upon your modern appliances or even your gadgets. It's true that a great chef hasn't any real need for a thermostatically controlled deep-fat fryer. His thermostat is in his eye, his nose and his memory—and his many assistants. But even he can't make pommes soufflées unless he has a proper slicer and the right kind of waxy potato. The finer the cook, the more careful he will be about the quality and sharpness of his cutlery, the size and placement of his cutting boards.

Chinese cooks will not attempt certain dishes unless they have a boat-shaped wock, and the Tuscan ladies who pride themselves upon their zabaglione would never consider making it without a round-bottom copper vessel sized right.

In the well-equipped American kitchens of today, our problems are at the same time simplified and more complicated. Tools like the electric blender will do many jobs, take the place of a mountain of equipment, and yet how many people keep their blenders hidden in the closet! My neighbor tells me: "We use ours only once in a while, just to make frozen Daiquiris."

Unless you are willing to invest a little time and thought, read instructions, learn the possibilities and the limitations of your equipment, why invest the money?

The Creative Urge

Add them all together—joy in the doing, a sense of fitness, understanding of your materials and your tools—and you might still end up with nothing very notable unless there was added a certain spark which sets your cooking apart, which makes a meal in your house different from all others.

No one can tell you exactly how to achieve that certain something. Don't worry about it. Don't try too hard. Given all the other elements, 9 times out of 100 you'll have that. Usually, especially when you are untried, it's best to concentrate on cooking happily and well.

Perhaps this is the place for a word of comfort to those whose families dislike too many novelties at the table. Even though she never presents a dish, many a woman has found plenty of scope for her artistry. If her pot roast is a dream, her gravies brown and silken, her mashed potatoes fluffy as sea spume, no one need feel frustrated. In certain fields of art (cooking is one of them), the performer can be as much an artist as the composer. There is nothing wrong with being a Horowitz or a Heifetz.

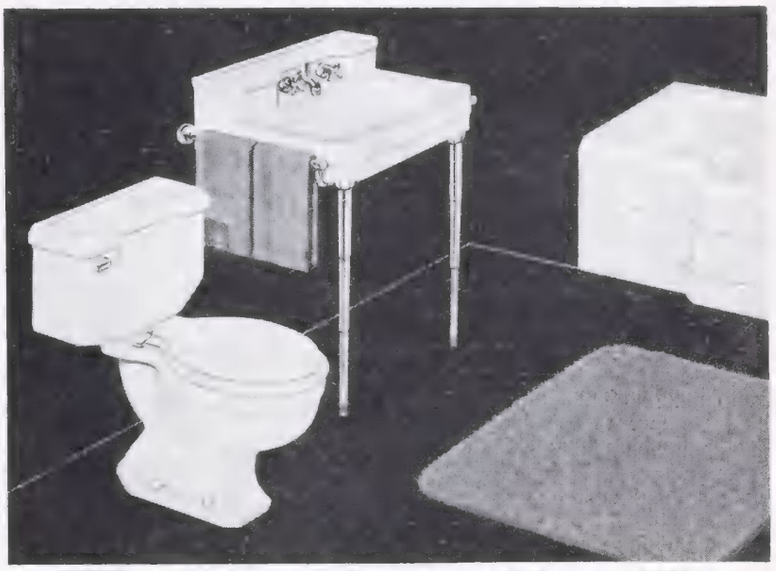
Alfredo's Fettuccini

Il vero Alfredo did not divulge his secret to me. But after several sittings and eatings, much observation, a number of leading questions, a dozen tries and recourse to (don't let this surprise you) Fanny Farmer's Boston Cooking School Cook Book, I can at last achieve Fettuccini that, unless my memory is very faulty, does taste like the Roman original, the most famous noodle dish in the world.

As you may have guessed, it's all in the noodle. For this dish it must be exceptionally fresh, a pasta made without water.

Use 2 cups Pillsbury or Gold Medal all-purpose flour, 3 whole eggs and 1 or 2 extra egg yolks, a dash of salt. (For a complete explanation of the technique of homemade pastas, see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, February 1954, page 164.) Cut pasta into ribbons about ¼-inch wide. Cook in plenty of boiling salted water, drain well.

Now for Alfredo-like drama: Melt ¼ pound unsalted butter but do not allow to froth or brown. Add ¼ pound freshly grated Parmesan cheese or you could use 1 cup freshly opened ready-grated Parmesan—none that has been standing open any time at all. Use a fine brand—Robins or Buitoni. Stir the cheese into the butter. Pour cheese and butter into a well-heated serving dish or platter, top with the noodles and then begin to toss with a spoon and fork until every golden tendril glistens.



Proportions here are for ½ pound of noodles to make 6 servings.

(Alfredo does a kind of ballet of the hands as he mixes with a golden spoon and fork presented to him by Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks.) We use Dirilyte and no special gestures. For the final result, you be the judge.

Pommes Soufflées

Classic example of the way in which knowledge of materials, knowledge of tools, and technique combine to produce a work of art for the table, is pommes soufflées—most glorified of fried potatoes.

all puffed up, nothing but air in the center like crisp gilded little pillows. They are the most glamorous of cocktail accompaniments—perfect to serve with a filet mignon, broiled chicken; or served as an adjunct to fried fish, the most elegant of all fish 'n chips.

There are a number of versions of the legend behind the invention of pommes soufflées. Some will tell you that it all goes back to the days of Louis XIV and a great feast planned in his honor to which the King was late. The fried potatoes lay sulking, cool and soggy on the side of the stove. Suddenly the word came that the royal party had arrived. The chef flung his potatoes back into the hot fat. Recklessly! He thought they were ruined. But no! They swelled! They bloomed! A single slice became almost as big as the whole potato. A gastronomic miracle!

The outlines of the story are always the same, but the setting and the time vary from book to book, from country to country. At the famed Pavillon de Henri IV on the outskirts of Paris they will tell you that the party in question was given to celebrate the opening of the first railroad in France in the early eighteen hundreds. The train carrying the official guests was, as might be expected, not quite on time. They insist that their original chef was the chef, their restaurant the true scene of the miracle. Choose your own cast of characters, but don't ignore the story, for it gives you a most important clue.

The recipe itself is very simple: Pare and cut 8 baking potatoes into $\frac{1}{8}$-inch slices. Soak in ice water 5 to 30 minutes. Remove from water, dry thoroughly. Have 2 kettles ready with oil in them three inches deep. Heat the oil in the first kettle to 225° F. Heat the oil in the second kettle to 425° F. Drop the potato slices a few at a time into the first kettle. Cook until blistered and just beginning to show a fine line of gold around the edge. Remove from the first kettle and drop into the hot fat in the second kettle. They will begin to puff immediately—or not at all. Keep turning them so that they brown evenly. Don't be upset if every slice doesn't puff. If three-fourths or even half of them do, that's good. (Unpuffed slices make good eating too.)

Drain on brown paper or paper towels. Cool. Just before serving, return for a few seconds to the frying kettle 425° to 450° F to heat and crisp. Sprinkle with salt.

Sounds easy and is easy if you pay attention to certain points:

1. The right potato: You must have a waxy potato of mature age. In our country the most reliable is the Idaho baking potato.

2. The right frying agent: Shortening isn't as "sure" as salad oil—Wesson, Mazola or Hi-Hat

3. Slices must be uniform. One-eighth of an inch thick—no more, no less. You had better not attempt it without some type of slicer. (At the Cordon Bleu in Paris they square off the edges so that each slice is exactly the same size, shape and thickness. This is not just for looks but seems to have an effect upon the final puffing.)

4. Get as much starch out of the potato as possible. Soak from 5 to 30 minutes in ice water.

5. Be sure to drain the potatoes and dry them very well.

6. As for tools, you simply can't do it without two kettles of oil held at two different temperatures. In the first kettle you must fry the potatoes at 225° F. until they are blistered and just beginning to brown around the edges.

7. Oil in the second kettle should be at 425° F. Unless you are blessed with thermostatically controlled equipment, the hazards are great. And remember, don't plug the two frying units into one circuit, or you'll blow a fuse.

Blueberry Tarts au Cointreau

But art need not always be long. Here for the most rushed of culinary artists is a dessert which we dedicate to a most charming gourmet, Jacques Mercier Cointreau, maker of the famous liqueur.

Order 12 tart shells from your baker, or make them from your favorite mix or recipe. Stir up a package of Royal Instant Pudding Mix, using 1 cup milk, 1 cup heavy whipping cream. Add 1 tablespoon Cointreau. Spoon the pudding into the tart shells. Heap with Tru Blu Berries, inspected rather than washed because washing removes the bloom and these berries, which are available a good part of the year all over the country, need very little going-over. At the last minute sprinkle with confectioners sugar which you will have flavored by keeping a piece of vanilla bean in the sugar shaker.

The firm-holding suction base is styled to allow space for a bowl; hopper accommodates large or small vegetables and fruits. Three easily interchangeable disks shred, slice, grate. $12.95. A potato-pancake disk costs $1. Chrome-white Shred-O-Mat, $7.95. From Hammacher Schlemmer, New York.

Vacuum-sweeping difficulties encountered with problem rugs, such as looped or shag cottons, motivated development of this tool. With the usual ones, the problem is met by simply reducing suctioning power. With a Per-Eze, it's done by suction disbursement that gives safe, effortless sweeping action without sacrifice of the machine's basic power. $12.95. (State brand of sweeper). Copper molds as beautiful as these are a rarity. Their distinctive designs are handsomely executed, and the copper itself is considerably heavier than found in most molds. The trio comprises Fruit Luster, an extra-size baking mold with center tube; Sunburst, a very ornamental design that has classic elegance; a loaf mold, ribbed for icing guidance. Priced at $9.95, $4.50, $5.95. From Amy Abbott, 41 W. 52nd St., N.Y.C.

There's Magic in 16mm Movies

Plan showing the magic of movies for your first film evening this fall. Follow the spell-binding history of illusion from its flickering beginnings to its sophisticated tactics of today. Here our film editor offers you a program that will do the trick

By CECILE STARR

Magic has three ways in movies. First, there is the optical illusion which your eyes play on you—the illusion that a series of still pictures "move." Second, that you have seen continuous action, when actually it is only fragmentary images for which your imagination fills in the blanks. Third, that you have seen everything that happened on the screen, whereas even when you are most attentive, you see only the effects which the film magician wanted you to see.

For your first evening at home this season with your projector, you can trace the history of movie-magic-making for yourself and your interested friends. At the same time, you'll be witnessing important scenes from movies that made history.

To reveal to you the mystical powers of the motion picture, I have selected five 16mm sound films which you can show at home. Remember, though, you must be alert. As in all magic, once you succumb to the spell of the illusion, you are lost in it. But if you watch carefully, you will see things you never dreamed were there.

Now for the films that make up this evening of movie magic: "Animation," and "Biography of the Motion Picture Camera" (showing the primitive beginnings of movie magic, both films released by Film Images, each 20 minutes); "March of the Movies" (a nostalgic overview from 1900 to the 1940's, produced by the March of Time, 20 minutes); "The Great Train Robbery" (the first American film to relate a consecutive story, 1903 vintage, running time five minutes); and, mainly laughs, "Song of the Prairie" (a puppet film lampooning the modern Westerns, 20 minutes).

"Animation" (subtitled "The Toy That Grew Up") shows nineteenth-century developments in the wonderful magic lantern. These were drawings, originals or printed copies, but not photographs: that is to say, no camera was used to create them. But they involved the principle of "persistence of vision," an anatomical working of the human eye which retains an image for one-third of a second longer than its actual duration.

Notice in the film some of the early toys which utilized this principle—the horse and rider painted on opposite sides of a disk which when twirled seems to blend the two images into one. Then there are the miniature merry-go-rounds with inserted strips of drawings that actually seem to move: horses leaping as gracefully today as they did a hundred years ago.

The height of the development of this camera-less optical illusion came in the work of Emile Reynaud who in the 1890's created a magic theater show using lenses, mirrors and turntables to set figures in motion. This complex machine, hand-operated in the film as it was by Reynaud himself, could tell a picture-story up to an hour in length.

The final sequence in "Animation" is a delightful comedy about the seaside adventures of a young couple. You will notice that the performance had a piano accompaniment, for even in earliest movie days silent films were not totally silent.

"Biography of the Motion Pi ıre Camera" shows how photogıphy fitted into the picture. While ıe magic lantern shows were cre-ing the semblance of motion with rawings, wholehearted efforts were -eing made to bring photographs life. Notice the first crude atmpts to show successive phases motion—the series of posed stills the girl embroidering, the model 24 cameras used by the Califor-a photographer Muybridge to ttle a bet that all four feet of a rse leave the ground for a split cond in a gallop (on this bet vernor Leland Stanford won 0,000). Dr. Jules Marey's mul-le exposures charting the move-nt of a man walking. With orge Eastman's invention of flex-e celluloid strips of film replac-g metal and glass plates, it came possible to build a machine ıt would take successive pictures t enough to show every needed ase of action. The first motion otography, or motor photogra-y as it was sometimes called, s far from smooth—but it more n satisfied its viewers. Millions coins were dropped into arcade p-show machines, the customer ning the crank to make the pic-es move and thrilling to Little pt dancing, baby being fed, or strongman flexing his muscles. About 1895 projectors were intro-ed, permitting 40 or 50 people view one film simultaneously. ice that there was no take-up , the film was allowed to run into a wastebasket. Notice, too, in place of a screen the film w projected on a sheet suspended fm the ceiling in the middle of th room. People sat on either side o the sheet—but those who saw th film on the reverse side paid or half price. (Say, your 16mm ho movie shows aren't so primiti after all!)

E first movies were primitive. but people were moved by them. Wn pictures of an onrushing ra oad train were projected, se-da men and women gasped, some of em cried out, and others actu-al ducked their heads to avoid be g "run over." The illusion was pe ect. Not only did the pictures mo e, but people were moved by th n. And as the skills of movie-m ing developed further, not only mo on, but great emotion, was m ically incorporated in the illu-sio In "March of the Movies," yo will see a startling outline of th development. In addition to a gl pse into the Hollywood studios, yo will see excerpts from old films no kept alive in the Museum of M ern Art's film library. In these ex pts a 50-year history is implicit. Most easily you will concentrate on the stars: Mary Pickford and Lionel Barrymore in 1912 in "The New York Hat." William S. Hart in scenes from "The Fugitive." Marie Dressler and Charlie Chaplin in "Tillie's Punctured Romance." Valentino doing a fantastic tango and Fairbanks in his breath-taking acrobatics. Greta Garbo and Gilbert Roland in a tense silent love-scene. Then the human voice: Al Jolson singing "Mammy." Will Rogers, Paul Muni, Lawrence Olivier, and many others whom the movies have made world-famous.

Changes in the style of acting and make-up are also easy to follow. If you look very carefully, you will see much more than the faces of movie stars—you will see how the illusion of reality is actually created, and how much your own imagination contributes to the effectiveness of the illusion. Take as an example the sequence from "Shoe Shine" which is included in "March of the Movies." It is the sequence in which the older boy is whipped by the jailkeeper. I say "the sequence in which the older boy is whipped," for this is how most people remember it. Yet he is not actually whipped. What is shown is something to this effect: A shot of the jailer taking off his belt and approaching the boy (Giuseppe), a shot of the boy's friends waiting in another room, the tenseness in their faces when screams are heard, their sympathetic reaction as they (and the camera) move toward the room where he (presumably) is being beaten, first one then all crying "Basta! Basta!" (Enough! Enough!"). The illusion is that you have seen the boy being whipped, and it is based on what I call "persistence of credulity." Your mind receives the images from your eye, fills in the gaps and omissions, and creates the illusion of continuous action which, thanks to your persistence of credulity, is as real to you as if you actually had seen it. In fact, sometimes it is difficult to convince yourself that you didn't see it. This is only one of the many tricks the movies play on you.

In looking at "March of the Movies," see if you can pick out some of the techniques and devices which have contributed year by year to its hypnotic powers. The close-up of a hand slipping a card under the table (in the William S. Hart sequence) gives the spectator a chance to see more of what is going on than he would probably see if he were sitting next to the man who did it. The speeded motion and fast editing in the Mack Sennett comedy help you in the mood of the slapstick hilarity. Chaplin's brilliant use of props (the plant becomes a toothbrush), and his unequalled face and body motility create a new kind of movement that compels the attention of your eye and your imagination.

Notice too the effectiveness of the scene from "The Big Parade" —despite its melodramatic touches, a remarkably moving scene, moves back and forth from one character to the other, from the girl who is trying to keep her sweetheart from leaving, to the man who is being carried away among many other soldiers in one truck lost among many other trucks. If you notice the angles on which the camera is placed, you will see how the film manages to make you feel as if you were present when the parting occurred. The final shot, of the seemingly endless parade of soldier-filled trucks, is all that is needed to convince you of the inevitability of the parting. Although the film is silent, notice that it does not have to rely upon subtitles make its meaning convincing.

By the time "Henry V" w made, sound had become an ess tial ingredient in motion pictu magic. In addition to Olivier's e citing voice and Shakespear poetic lines, try to single out t effect of the intensely mounti music which accompanies the ri of the French horsemen, the ca tious silence of the English whi precedes the piercing whirrr their arrows. Note, too, the numb of different angles from whi Olivier is photographed—each them designed to heighten a glorify him as a great leader. Th are some of things that you f and react to when you see a co plete movie.

In the sequence from "All Qu on the Western Front," moveme is minimal. From behind an ar trench a soldier reaches out tow a butterfly, slowly, slowly—an e my soldier raises a rifle—the a reaches further toward the butt fly, a shot is heard, the arm f limp. But you, the spectator, f as if you had seen much more t this—you have seen a man kill you have seen a man's hopes kill It is a scene of this sort which prompted some people to refer the motion picture as the m powerful medium of expression developed.

Even though sound is indispe able, the movies are essenti visual. You can test this by y own reaction to the sequence of Jolson singing "Mammy," in bl face on a stage. His voice tells that its more than an act: in rendition he is trying to conve heartfelt emotion. But you are really moved until you see, in midst of his song, an inserted of his tear-eyed mother listenin he sings. Dear old mother, you to yourself, as devotedly and derly as if she were yours.

You can study your reaction these bits of movie-magic bec they are only small bits. Once get involved in a whole film, is a good production, you bec so thoroughly involved that couldn't possibly distinguish w you have really seen and h from what you think you have and heard. It will be a welc change, now, to turn to "The G Train Robbery," the first Amer film to tell a story. It was mad 1903 by William S. Porter unlike the first films which Avoiding the labor expense of a two-man commercial crew may save up to $30 or $35. Some owners get a kick out of just satisfactorily rigging an installation.

Whatever your reason, you won't need an electronics education to be able to do a good job, providing the reception is good in your area. In fringe areas, or under other poor signal conditions, you'll be more satisfied and will probably be money ahead by turning your installation over to an expert right at the beginning.

Your location in relation to a transmitting station is a major determining factor of your reception quality. TV signals, traveling in an almost straight line from the transmitter, do not follow the curvature of the earth. After a certain distance, they no longer hit your antenna. This distance varies according to the transmitter height and your terrain. As an average, an immediate zone of up to a ten-mile radius, with a strong signal, is established about the transmitter. An intermediate zone extends to a fifty or seventy-five mile radius. Beyond that is the fringe area. The first two zones are practical for home antenna installation: fringe area conditions are tricky.

A transmitter may be located on a peak or other eminence. If so, the fringe area may be pushed back to a greater distance.

Microwave systems now carry programs far beyond their source by means of a series of strategically placed relay stations. Unless they are actually transmitting stations, these merely keep the signal near ground level and do not affect your reception or the placement of your antenna.

Mountains can block a TV signal.

even though you are close to a transmitter, creating poor reception or dead areas. Successful installations in rugged terrain are usually beyond the average set owner. On the other hand, conditions are good in the flat Midwest, or similar country, or over water between coastal points.

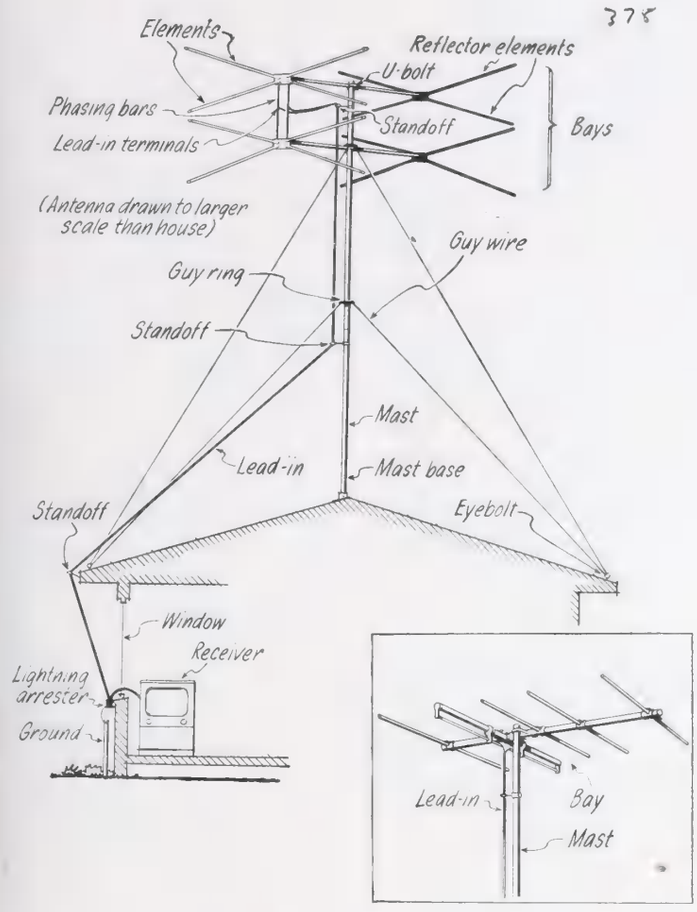
The required mast height limits home antenna installation. Up to thirty feet, or possibly forty feet with a good helper, is about the maximum for safety and stability.

Though the antenna in Fig. A is higher, it is safer than Fig. B because of its short mast. But remember, if you live in what is considered a clear signal area, your antenna mast will most likely not need to extend over thirty feet.

The farther away you are from the transmitter, the more bays on your antenna are necessary in order to bring in the signal. You can very easily handle an antenna with one, two, or sometimes three bays, but leave the installation of the four-bay job to the professionals.

A glance around your neighborhood will usually tell if yours is a clear signal area, and what kind of an antenna is most suited for it. If antennas are numerous, of a common type, of one or two bays, and not excessively high from the ground, go ahead with your own installation. If they are of expensive types, multi-bayed, set at angles, or have other irregularities, you'd better call in the experts.



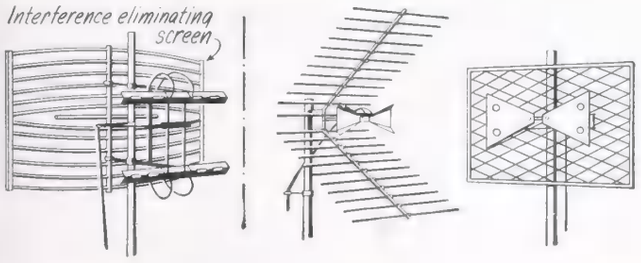
In any case, call on your television dealer for the correct advice about local conditions. He's best qualified to recommend the type of antenna you require, height of mast, number of bays, and to warn of sources of interference or any other details you'll need to know before starting the job. Don't buy more antenna than your dealer thinks you need, as the extra bays or more expensive types won't improve your reception in what is already a good area. However, don't shop for cut-rate "bargains" whose flimsy construction and low-grade material may deteriorate rapidly when exposed to the elements. Makes, styles, and prices of antennas vary greatly in the highly competitive present-day market, but the following are some of the most popular and effective types now in use:

INTERIOR ANTENNAS: Most of the modern television sets are equipped with built-in antennas which are efficient up to five or ten miles from the transmitter, providing the line of sight is not blocked by a mountain, tall building, or other obstacle. If you are situated close to a transmitter, the signal may be too strong for use of an exterior antenna. A variation of the built-in is the "rabbit ear" type.

familiar feature of older sets. They sell now for about $6 and operate from the top of the receiver.

V-CONE or CONICAL: This is the most popular and practical type for VHF (very high frequency) reception in clear signal areas. It is inexpensive, easy to install and orient. Illustration (top, right) shows a complete two-bay installation with parts labeled. Prices range from $5 or $6 for one bay, to $15 or $20 for three bays, exclusive of mast, lead-in, guys, or other fittings.

YAGI: Named for its Japanese inventor, the yagi (above, in box) is the most common VHF directional type. Its narrow signal receiving width eliminates interference from the side or rear. Mostly used in or near fringe areas, it separates the signals from another transmitter which overlap the ranges of your desired channels. Its directional characteristics require more careful orientation than those of the V-cone. Single-bay models cost about $20, double-bay models about $40.



PARABOLIC: This is used in the same manner as a multi-bay yagi, but is simpler to handle because it is already "stacked," that is, the bays are all in one unit. Cost of this sturdy antenna is about $40.

VHF: Ultra high frequency reception requires a different antenna, can be picked up without difficulty within a radius of about fifty miles, if you are in a clear signal area. Flat country, like the Midwest or in California's San Joaquin Valley, is good UHF territory. Antenna can be installed above VHF rig on same mast. The corner-reflector and bow-tie models (see illustration below) have proven most successful so far, must be oriented with the same care as the yagi type. They cost about $10 to $15.

Your television dealer can supply all you need for the installation. In addition to the antenna, which comes in kit form, you'll need for its erection:

MAST: Steel tube or pipe is most commonly used (aluminum is not strong enough to withstand winds). Diameter, from $\frac{3}{4}$" to $1\frac{1}{4}$", varies

Would you save this CHILD?

IF YOU SAW THIS CHILD, would you pick him up and save him as Bill Asbury, CCF representative, did in Korea a few weeks ago? We are sure you would not "pass by on the other side" to leave him die. He is now in a CCF orphanage being decently cared for. He is there with other children—children like the baby whose mother brought him to the superintendent, saying she could not find work and could not care for her baby. The baby was accepted and the mother started away and then fell. When the superintendent reached her, she was dead—of starvation. Some CCF orphanage children were pulled apart from the arms of their mothers—the children just faintly alive, their mothers dead.

Bill Asbury is making no complaint about the dirt and discomfort connected with his job or even about the vermin, far more alive on such a child than the child himself. But he is heavy hearted over the many children he can't save for lack of funds.

He will be glad, if you wish, to pick up a starving boy or girl for you and place him or her in one of the 42 Korean orphanages in which CCF assists children. The cost in Korea and in all countries where CCF operates is ten dollars a month and you will receive your child's name, address, story and picture. You can correspond with your child. Children can be "adopted" in CCF orphanages around the world; in the following countries: Borneo, Brazil, Burma, Finland, Formosa, Hong Kong, India, Indochina, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Lapland, Lebanon, Malaya, Mexico, Okinawa, Pakistan, Philippines, Puerto Rico, United States and Western Germany.

"And the Lord took little children into His arms and blessed them." 20,000 Americans have done likewise by "adopting" children through CCF. Gifts of any amount are welcome.

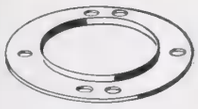
according to mast height, antenna weight, local wind conditions. It is manufactured in ten-foot lengths which telescope for easy assembly, strength and rigidity, costs about 50¢ to 60¢ per foot. For masts under ten feet in height, ordinary pipe will suffice. Place your mast at the highest point of the house, if possible. Extending the antenna above the height recommended is no advantage at all. It only exposes the antenna to much stronger winds.

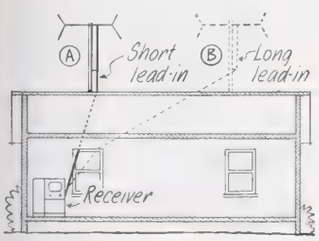
LEAD-IN LINE: This is made in a variety of flat, tubular, and open-wire types, selling from about 3¢ to 12¢ per foot. Your dealer will recommend the type most suited to your area. It must reach from the antenna to the position of your TV set inside the house.

STANDOFF INSULATORS: The average installation requires two clamp-type standoffs on the mast and one wood-screw type at the eave of the house, to prevent the wind from whipping the lead-in. Costs range from about 15¢ to 30¢ each.



GUY WIRES: Commercial guy wire is usually "4/20," consisting of four strands of twisted No. 20 steel wire, for average use. "6/20," six strands of No. 20 wire, is used in windy areas. Some installers prefer the solid guy wire sold in any hardware store, though it is a little stiffer to handle. For steadiness, four guys are recommended for each ten-foot section of mast. Under ten feet, guys are not needed except in extremely windy areas. To estimate the amount of wire needed, use the chart above. Mark the height of the guying point on the mast (A) and the elevation of the mast base (B) above the lower guying point (C) on the vertical scale. On the horizontal scale, measure the distance between points (B) and (C). Diagonal (A-C) will be the required length of the wire. Add three feet for ties and sag, and repeat for each guy. The angle between the guy wire and the mast must be 30 degrees or more for effective bracing. Total wire costs should not run over 50¢ or $1.

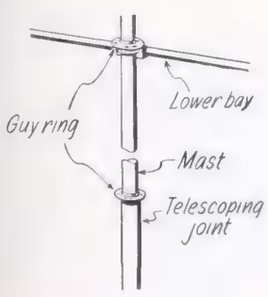
The scale may also be used to figure the length of the lead-in that you will need for your TV antenna.



GUY RINGS: These hold the guys to the mast, and are often included with its purchase. If not, buy one for each ten-foot section.

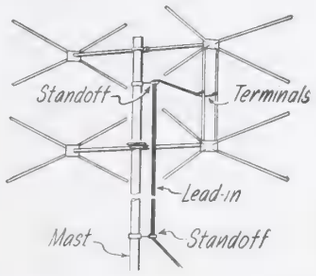
EYE-BOLTS: one screw-type eye bolt is required to hold each corner of your guying pattern to the eave of the roof.

MAST BASE: The swivel type, for ease in raising or repairing the antenna, is recommended for the average roof installation. $2.50 will buy a good serviceable one.



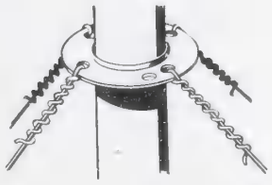
With these items, a good strong ladder, and a pair of nonskid shoes, you're ready to put up your antenna. Before locating it on the roof, consider its position in relation to that of the TV set inside the house. Spot it to use the shortest possible lead-in, as the signal weakens passing through the wire. Antenna position A is better than position B.

Follow this procedure to erect the installation:

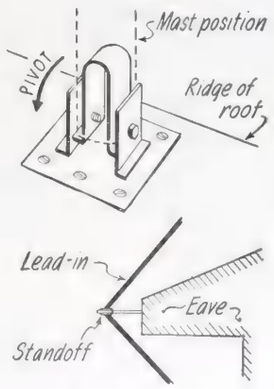


(1) Assemble antenna according to the directions on the kit. This is simple and quick, usually requiring only the insertion and tightening of the elements in their designated positions.

(2) Assemble mast sections, guy rings, and clamp antenna in place with U-bolts. If one set of guy wires is used, ring is prevented from sliding down by lowest bay of antenna. Joints of mast hold additional rings in position if more than one set of guys is needed.



(3) Attach lead-in wires to terminals on antenna. If open-tube lead-in is used, seal the top end by heating plastic momentarily with a match, then crimping tightly together. Tape or otherwise seal the whole juncture to prevent corrosion.



(4) Attach standoff to mast, slightly higher than position of terminals in multi-bay rigs to lessen pull on the terminals when antenna is in position. Affix other standoff about halfway down the mast, and fasten lead-in. No twist is necessary in the lead-in.

(5) Run guy wires through holes in guy rings and fasten by twisting wire ends several times.

(6) Screw mast base into position on ridge of roof, picking a spot where the wood structure underneath is most solid. Screw eye bolts to roof, preferably on the overhang where there will be no danger of leakage through holes. The final standoff is screwed to a rafter end so lead-in can clear the eave of the roof.

(7) With helper, place complete assembly on its base and fasten guy wires to eye bolts, checking vertical alignment of mast carefully. Some use turnbuckles near the eye bolts. This is not necessary and can be dangerous if the guy wires are tautened to such an extent that a gust of wind will snap them. Pulling them tight by hand only allows the natural sag to absorb sudden shocks.

(8) Affix lead-in to eave standoff, and orient for proper pointing of antenna by revolving mast slowly while assistant checks reception on TV set in house. A direct bearing on the transmitter may not always be the best direction because of "ghosts," or secondary reflections of the signal from local sources. At the point of best reception, tighten set screws of mast base to hold antenna in position.

(9) The simplest method of bringing the lead-in within the house is by running it through a slight crack at the top of a window. Lowering the window on the wires at the bottom is not advised because of excessive wear on them. A neater method is via a small hole drilled through the sash. If an open-tube lead-in is used, stop it at the window and splice to a flat lead-in to carry it into the house. Do not beat and crimp this end of the tube, but protect the whole joint with tape. Illustration below shows the proper and improper methods of making the splices.

Some TV owners prefer to hide the lead-in by bringing it through the roof or side of the house, running it through the wall, and terminating it at an outlet near the set. Additional outlets permit plugging the set into other rooms of the house. Dealers sell special fittings for this purpose.

Special brackets are available for alternate mast bases when a ridge position is impractical or is not desired. The wall mount is suitable for short masts without guys. A chimney mounting, with the mast held firmly by steel straps, is sturdy and prevents marring a roof. Prices average about $2 to $5.

Some localities require by law the installation of lightning arresters, and they are advisable in any region subject to electrical disturbances. These retail for about $1.25 to $2.50, but buy the type adaptable to your particular kind of lead-in. The simplest mounting is on the window frame, with wire to a water pipe or other ground.

Antenna rotators, directional switches, and similar accessories are not usually necessary in clear signal areas, but two-set couplers are becoming popular as families add a second TV to their home. With one of these devices, the main lead-in terminates at the coupler and connects to the sets by separate lead-ins, avoiding the necessity of installing another antenna. Both sets can then operate together, on the same or on different channels. Prices range from $5 or $6 for cheaper types up to about $30 for a coupler operating with no signal loss during transmission.

only one camera set-up, this one had 14 different scenes. Most of the indoor scenes look like stage sets (in one there is even a painted stove on a painted wall), the acting is full of frantic gestures, and because no close-ups are used to help tell the story it is practically impossible to tell one character from another. But, if you look carefully, you will see that twice in the film the camera moves to follow the action of horses and men. You may also be able to sense the excitement the first audiences felt when they rode (with the camera) right on top of the coal-car. The pace of the film is slow to us today, but in 1933 it was fast enough to leave people breathless. The startling close-up of the man with the smoking gun evoked howls of tense excitement in those "golden" days.

I'm telling you this to remind you that this magic business is all relative—and in another 50 years your grandchildren will be at home looking at excerpts from today's modern films and wondering how you could possibly have found them so fascinating. (Note: To get the proper effect of "The Great Train Robbery," it should be shown silent, at silent speed. If you are unable to regulate your projector for silent speed, you should tell your audience that the excessive jerkiness was not present when the film was made. And do turn off the sound—it's only inanely distracting.)

"Song of the Prairie" is a delightful finale to your evening at home with the magic of movies. Although its characters are only puppets, the illusion of reality is greater than the real people could convey in "The Great Train Robbery." Where does the reality come from? Notice that aside from the clever story, the film is very exciting to look at. The excitement comes from close identification of the characters—hero, heroine, villain, good men and bad men, and yes, even the horse become important to you because you have seen them close up. Notice too the careful variety of angles, the fast change of shots, and the patient use of details to make each incident contribute a worthy share to the effectiveness of the whole film. I said earlier that there were 14 changes of scene in "The Great Train Robbery"—very likely there are ten times that many in "Song of the Prairie." The fast intercutting from one shot to another creates both the sense of movement within the film and the sense of participation among the viewers. Music and sound effects provide humorous punctuation, and the hero's song becomes a unifying motif. Despite their being made of paper and paste, the movie characters in this film seem life-like and believable—mainly because the film's director (Czech puppeteer Jan Trynka) knew the tricks of movie-making. There is a feeling of wide-open space, purely deceptive, yet at the same time completely convincing. This, after all, is the secret of all magic—its illusions must be totally credible, and at the same time quite incredible.

These five films can be rented individually from a number of educational and commercial 16mm film libraries. They can also be ordered, mounted on two 40-minute reels, from Contemporary Films, 13 East 37th Street, New York 16, N. Y. Total price for the program is $30. If cost is a problem, you can make it a co-operative venture by planning the evening as a Dutch-treat get together. If economy is essential, "Song of the Prairie" can be eliminated, thus reducing the total cost of the program to $20.

You should also write for a free copy of Contemporary Film's brand-new 16mm catalog. It lists a number of important feature films of the Twenties and Thirties which you may want to delve into for a further look at the magic of movies—"The Last Laugh," "The Blue Angel," "The Gay Desperado," "It Happened One Night," "Stage Coach," "The Lady Vanishes," and dozens of others.

Bathroom design by Pietro Belluschi, F.A.I.A.

"CLAY TILE...AN IDEAL MEDIUM FOR MODERN DESIGN... OFFERS LASTING BEAUTY, EASY CARE"

Pietro Belluschi

Here, in clay tiles of contrasting grays and black, is architect Pietro Belluschi's exciting, practical conception of a modern bath. Imagine how your bath could look with a dash of modern design—and clay tile!

The spacious clay tiled countertop, which doubles as a vanity, can be easily adapted for dual sinks to ease "traffic congestion." And through years of wear and tear, clay tile will remain bright and beautiful with minimum effort.

In a luxurious clay tile tub-plunge like this one, bathing becomes a delightful event . . . with towels within easy reach in the tiled storage space.

Picture these same lustrous expanses of glazed wall tile in your bath and stall shower area . . . the most enduringly beautiful of all wall surfaces—and the most practical. Remember, too, that clay tile floors come clean with a touch of a damp mop.

IMPORTANT: When building or remodeling, ask your tile contractor about the new adhesive method for installing clay tile. It may save you money. Be sure to see the wide range of sparkling clay tile colors, too!

Get clay tile remodeling and new construction ideas from colorful, new brochure "Ideas Unlimited" plus a folder on ideas used in the Belluschi bath. Both for 10¢. Write to Tile Council of America, Dept. HB-2, Room 3401, 10 East 40th Street, New York, N. Y. or Room 433, 727 W. Seventh St., Los Angeles, Calif.

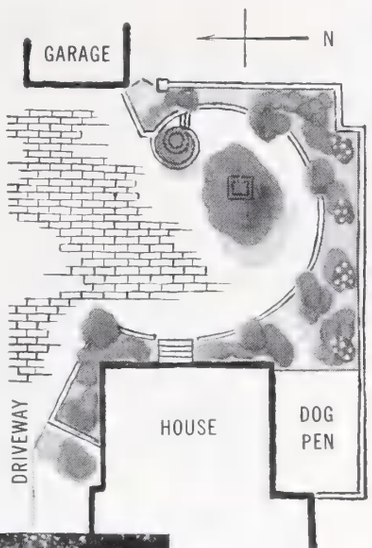
Double-duty driveway

It's not the best place for a terrace, but here's proof that it's very acceptable when no other space is available



Older houses, crowded onto too-small city lots, often have the garage way back on the rear lotline, with a long driveway wasting the precious existing side-line space.

All this was true when landscape architects Marie and Arthur Berger were called in by Mrs. H. E. Merrithew. The only "free" space was that which had to be used to turn cars to save the dangerously long back-out to a busy Dallas street.

The solution conceived by the Bergers and installed by Houston B. Bliss is a court that takes care of cars when necessary. At other times it is a handsome private terrace with interesting flowing lines of low brick walls that protect the big masses of caladiums, begonias, amaryllis, ginger lilies and coleus from being brushed by turning cars.

PLAN DRAWING BY WILLIAM BOLIN

Whole court is handsomely paved in brick set in concrete (4" concrete base), is easily washed. Curves were calculated carefully to provide right space for turning cars easily.

A great tree

If you have one, protect and cherish it. Then arrange your garden so the tree is a dominant feature

There is no substitute for great, mature trees. They temper the climate, deflect dust and noise, and impart dignity and a sense of permanence to their surroundings. A single fine old tree may increase the resale value of a property by a thousand dollars—but who can put a price on the strong, clean thrust of the tree trunk, the intricate pattern of branches in winter, or the spring-time miracle of tender buds swelling into full green leaves which change to autumn's colors? A tree should be dominant in a garden. If you are building a new house, try to arrange your site to feature your trees. Or, try a remodeling scheme that relates your present house and garden to a near-by elm tree or a spreading maple.

By acquiring a bit of adjoining land, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Courtemanche, J. were able to create a new garden with a view toward their magnificent wee ing willow. The tree already shaded a patio but was too close at hand to l enjoyed fully. Plain wall and simple planting allow tree deserved prominenc is a treasure

EDWARD GREEN, ARCHITECT

This combination of summer shade and winter sun for the terrace, with a year-round view of stalwart tree sculpture for the living room, didn't just happen. Architect worked with landscape architect to relate Mr. and Mrs. Earl Meissner's new home to the mature Oregon maples already on their property. Note the clean sweep of land and trees, uncluttered by trivial planting. Floodlights from house make trees a nightly pleasure, too.

Steps gain importance if bound on at least one side with a low wall like this. Keeping bricks lengthwise in treads of steps also helps, as does neatness in mortaring between bricks. (Here this lengthwise pattern repeats pattern of wall, gives unity and direction to the entry.) Note how overhanging wall coping produces shadows.

Professional touches for your garden

You may not rate yourself as an expert garden builder, but your handiwork can equal the best if you pay attention to these details as you go along in your gardening

When a grass path climbs a slope, help prevent unsightly erosion (and resulting thin grass) by inserting steps at intervals. This allows you to regrade, reducing the angle of slope in areas between steps. They do not need to be spaced regularly. Let slope determine this.

Successful use of art objects in a garden takes real skill. This would have been a blank garage wall facing the living terrace if the landscape architects hadn't introduced the panel of brick pattern framing a bronze bas-relief. Vine in V-form in Pyracantha, trained on a strong wire. Vine at right is Wisteria, kept pruned to avoid its natural habit of rampant, messy growth.

GARDENS DESIGNED BY MARIE & ARTHUR BERGER, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

Amateurs tend to make steps too steep, resulting in an uneasy feeling when you use them. Low, broad steps induce a feeling of real luxury as well as restfulness. If you can arrange them so that they curve gracefully instead of cutting across the direction of travel at right angles, steps seem much more inviting. Also note pot garden.

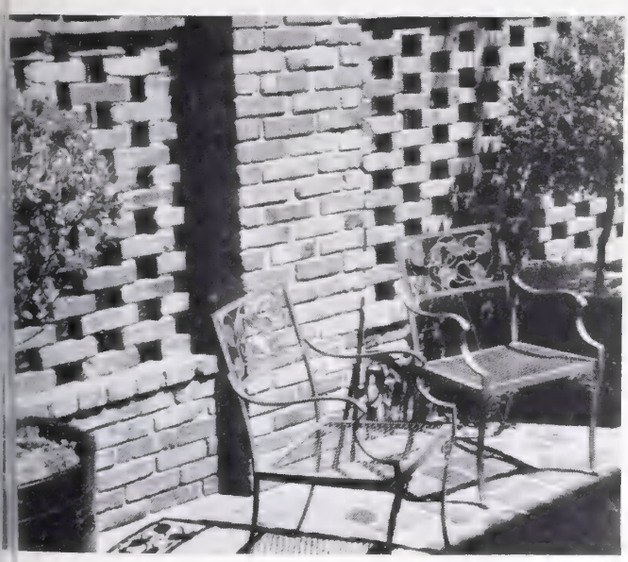
Mowing strip between lawn and plantings makes lawn care easier and serves as attractive eye director. Set it at the level of the soil, not the height of the grass. Use concrete, brick, tile or cut stone.

MARIE & ARTHUR BERGER, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

Inserting pattern units into terrace pavings adds real interest if done skillfully, as here, especially if emphasized subtly by combining with a handsome plant in a container of appropriate size.

Where a ground cover planting (here Baltic ivy) meets a paved area, let the plants grow over the junction line to soften it, as here. But don't allow growth to grow out too far. Prune back regularly.



Big areas of brick are likely to be monotonous unless patterned. This is an entrance court with real distinction. Brick wall defining it adds its own beauty, as do shadows of wisely sited plants.

ARIE & ARTHUR BERGER, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

Because wrought iron was often so badly used in the past is no reason to deny yourself the beauty it can bring to your garden. Just insist upon good design and appropriateness in the place you use it.

This tiny sit-spot is less than 10 feet wide but has the luxury of boundless space because as much care was given its design. Wall gives stature—also privacy and wanted breezes. Plants are in space-saving tubs.

Books for Gardeners

The Secret of the Green Thumb, by Rebecca and Henry Northen. Ronald Press, N. Y., 1954. $5.00. There are numerous how-to books of directions for various phases of gardening but until now no real botany book for the ardent amateur gardener who wants to know why plants act as they do. Attempts to write the needed book always bogged down in technical and historical botany. No one seemed able to skip over this unwanted information to get directly at plant physiology, bud setting, sunlight effects, nutrition, micro climate responses, etc. Home gardeners have plodded along through Meyer and Anderson's famous college textbook on plant physiology, and I'd guess that some of the best garden club programs of all times resulted from patient digging in this heavy going. Certainly Dr. Edgar Anderson's Plants, Man and Life was the most welcome garden book in years, although it was never intended for reference-book use by home gardeners.

The Northens, like Dr. Anderson, are professional botanists (University of Wyoming) who write and speak eloquently, enthusiastically, and always sympathetically for non-botanists. Read on page 111 why streetlights can affect the fall coloration of your shade trees. Or on page 92 why timberline flowers occur in brilliant colors. Look inside a leaf (page 45), or at exposed roots of lawngrass (page 53) and weeds after a storm (page 50). Or read the story of the seasons (page 163).

This is a book to own, also a book to give to serious gardeners. You—and they—will be fascinated, more each year as you make discoveries of your own on how plants live and grow and why.

Labour-Saving Planning and Planting by F. A. Mercer and Roy Hay. Studio-Crowell, New York, 1954. $4.50. Writing how-to books on saving labor is a popular sport today. The results sometimes make it seem that labor saving is the principal reason to garden. The means of making greater enjoyment possible now have become the ends. Ridiculous. Man gardens for many reasons but only a confirmed miser "gardens to save."

Editor Mercer and Hay have the right idea. They frankly say they are writing only to bring some comfort to busy garden lovers who must save time. Contributors to the book were asked for suggestions on garden designing and remodeling that would combine beauty with serviceability, charm with easy maintenance, assurance of a garden gay and dignified with a minimum of cost for aftercare. Note that beauty is the first requirement.

The Boakes' chapter on garden surfacing and paving is especially helpful for its details on construction. (You may not care for the designs of the paths and terraces—they are for English gardens.)

Frederick Street, writing about using trees and shrubs, makes a strong case for the very worthwhile idea that the time of planting is not the occasion to stint the work. This follows proper planting. He also develops skillfully the idea that "the flower is not the final beauty of the flowering shrub" and that "acid soil cries out for gardening in the modern manner" (by which he means a woodland garden or glade).

House Beautiful readers will recall landscape architect Thomas Church's stimulating article on the role of paint in the garden (July 1953, page 76) will be interested in author Wood's championing for a return to favor of white paint for garden structures and fences. Color out of favor in England for the past 50 years, he says. Church you may recall, likes browns (which Wood detests) and Church uses white principally to define an "enclose" (visually) an area.

Earlier I deplored the how-to mania that ignores the end result to rack up a high labor-saving score enroute. Mr. Wood says this another way. "Indeed, the attitude to gardening in this century would seem to be unduly serious and even sentimental, and to have lost, perhaps more than any of the other arts, much of the spontaneity which it once had, and there would seem to be a need for a fresh access of simply Mozartian gaiety in our feeling for our gardens."

Out in the Open, by Ray Koon, Little, Brown and Co., Boston, 1954, $2.95. Would-be gardeners find no end of how-to books—how-to dig, hoe, plant, cultivate, prune and spray. These are the fundamentals of gardening, of course, but equally important, the attitudes of the gardener are seldom discussed. Yet without them you aren't likely to find gardening the happy, rewarding series of experiences you expect.

Gardeners need patience: The seasons run their course at their own speed, plants grow according to ordained rates, flowers appear only when the days are the right length or temperature. Gardeners need imagination: Plants are living, everchanging, so you always plant for the future.

Gardeners need to value experience: The necessary skills are easily acquired, but many books mislead you by inferring that all you need do for success is follow some how-to rules like a cookbook recipe. Skill comes from doing, not reading.

Gardeners need appreciation for equipment—for much, much more than the rake, hoe and spade so often listed as "the essentials." Without enough of the right equipment you work far harder for satisfying results. What you need depends upon what particular plants you decide to grow. Look to a reliable nurseryman or garden center early in your gardening. Get to know the head man personally. Don't be tempted by the array of garden gadgets he has for sale. Don't ask him if this is what you should buy. (He'd feel like a man taking candy from a child to tell you that you shouldn't have what you apparently want.) But do ask him what you really need. He wants your business through the years, so he won't oversell you.

Lastly, gardeners need optimism. The weather always seems hopeless, the bugs and blights worse than ever, the future hopeless. But memory is short. All these troubles pass quickly, as they always do, as you soon discover if you keep a diary instead of trusting to memory for how it was in other years.

Ray Koon has written for the would-be gardener with all five attitudes involved in every how-to discussion. He rightly reserves the how-to until he philosophizes. Let me quote from his discussion on dogwood trees:

"One of my most vivid boyhood memories is that of going trout fishing in the mountains of Pennsylvania when the dogwoods were in bloom. There were hundreds of these trees and many of them must have been forty feet high—or so they seemed.

"I remember the dogwoods of those forests as wayward trees, crouching in the shadows of the taller species and leaning out to catch the light that filtered through the woodland canopy. Their flattened branches, bare of leaves in May and covered with ivory bracts, were a sight ever to be remembered.

"The dogwood is a most interesting tree the whole year through. The true flower is but a greenish bunch of tubes. It is the four bracts that are so showy, and when they are gone the waxy fruits are formed in brilliant red, always conspicuous among the bright curving leaves.

"Buds for the next spring develop in the late summer, a pledge of another season of bountiful bloom. When the scarlet leaves have fallen in October, then the symmetry of the tree itself is revealed—a graceful gray form.

"Planted against a backdrop of evergreens on the home grounds, dogwoods are most effective, since their own leaves are still folded when they flower.

"Nurserymen list our native American or flowering dogwood as Cornus florida. That's the ivory-flowered one. The pink variety is C. florida rubra, a handsome thing.

"Several years ago I set out a dozen little three-foot plants on my poor 'pine soil' in Weston. But they were planted with care, and for several seasons have bloomed splendidly. Right now they are fifteen feet tall with an equal spread.

"After selecting the spot where each tree was to go, I removed two wheelbarrow loads of that poor earth, leaving a hole one and one half feet wide. Into this hole—with the tree—went two wheelbarrow loads of a mixture of equal parts acid leaf mold and old compost rotted down from garden trash; also a big double handful of bag fertilizer. The tree was set and the filling well firmed by tramping. Then the water—plenty of it—and more as it was needed that first summer. A two-inch pad of pine needles was finally laid down over a spread of three feet. Each April these trees have had some ordinary garden fertilizer, 4-12-4, 5-10-5, or similar formula, right over the mulch.

"Plant dogwoods in April. Plant them in bloom and even after leaf growth has started. And don't forget the water the first year."—J. E. H.

Tallyho!

ou can be quite active at any of North Carolina's famous ter resorts without ever once ng off, raising a tennis racket, mounting a horse. Each sport actually offers almost as much for those who merely watch as for those who participate. Horse-lovers, for instance, may spurn Pinehurst's 72 holes of superior golf, may even shun the riding stables and, instead, go down of a morning to the three winter training tracks just to look on while royalty among harness racers are put through their daily workouts.

And hunting as it is done at near-by Southern Pines at Sedgefield and at Tryon is a spectacle as well as a chase. This is the formal, traditional Hunt, with pink coats and stirrup cups, the hunt breakfast, Tallyho and all, done, moreover, in picture-book country and often good for exhibitions of fine riding.

The very tops in horse-watching comes in March and April, of course, when you can witness such nationally recognized events as the Stoneybrook Hunt Racing Meet at Southern Pines or Tryon's Block House Steeplechase Meeting; and the Pinehurst Driving Club holds its series of Sunday afternoon harness race matinees.

But the formal hunting season actually opens as early as Thanksgiving Day, and from then into spring the Sedgefield Hunt goes out on two fox hunts weekly; and the famous Moore County Hounds of Southern Pines, and the Tryon Hounds on one fox and two drag hunts each week—the latter omitting the fox by substituting an artificial scent. At all four the entire season is enlivened by related events: horse shows, dog shows, field and hunter trials, gymkhanas, all, as well as the hunt itself, excellent spectating.

The curve makes a graceful entrance

Dallas physician B. J. Berger knew that he was tired of seeing front lawns bisected by a concrete ribbon leading to the front door. He took his problem to his brother, a landscape architect.

The solution, a curving path of bricks laid on a firm bed of sand, is one that could serve any time that the unbroken spaciousness of an open front lawn would be welcome.

But be sure that the curve is a sensible one: it must curve for some reason. Have it go all the way to the edge of the lawn area; never leave it stranded between two pieces of lawn. And, please, no wiggles or reverse curves.

MARIE AND ARTHUR BERGER, LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTS

Line of shrubs that ends this part of the front garden separates it from driveway, hiding cars and service operations from view to and from front door. Sunburst of bricks gives extra scale needed for junction of curving path and steps, adds further grace to path.

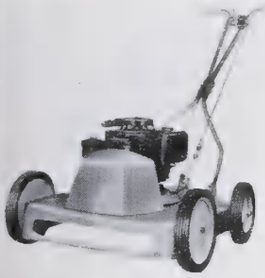
Build the terrace first

New homeowners are always in a hurry to get started with the garden. They feel they must "landscape," meaning in this case "planting bushes." Better to take time to plan the whole landscape design. Then make the number one job the terrace. Nothing pays off so well or so fast. It puts your yard to work for you. It enlarges the floor area of your house. It takes some of the wear off the house.



Trees for shade and shrubs for privacy all can come along as fast as your time and budget permit. They enhance the usefulness of your terrace and the enjoyment of your house. They are important, but the terrace is vital. Without it there can be no garden living. So tackle the terrace first.

Modern House Plants

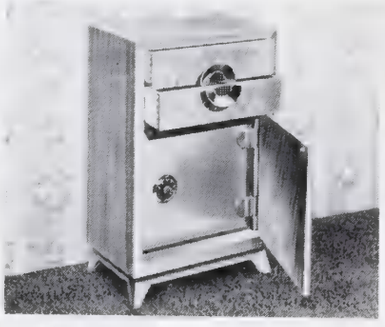
Xanthosoma Lindenii var. Magnifica

This is a showy house plant from tropical America. The arrow-shaped leaves are prominently veined with white and average about 12 inches in length. The plant is compact and spectacular. It resembles a caladium in size and habit, but the foliage is much heavier.

This species must have shade, light, rich soil, and warm air (50° minimum). Give it an abundance of water in summer but keep fairly dry in winter.

Though first discovered in 1871 in Columbia, the Xanthosoma is a new plant on the markets in this country. The variety magnifica, as pictured, is more beautiful than the straight species of Lindenii.

Common Garden Fallacies



People say: Evergreens need a lot of water.

The truth: Evergreens do best if never allowed to dry out, but the soil must have perfect drainage at all times.

The irritating problems encountered with thumbtacks are things of the past with Quik-Tak. The magnetized end picks up tacks and pushes them into place with easy pressure. Quite a time-saver with shelving, and with few or many tacks, a welcome finger-saver. $1 for 2, from Miles Kimball Co., Oshkosh 9, Wis.

Rug-Bind is applied by simply tapping it into place with a hammer. It's easy, quick, and the finished job looks professional. THE ARTS OF DAILY LIVING SHOW

By JUDY BLUNDELL ADLER

Here is professional help for all those who would like to use this month's issue of House Beautiful as a practical guide to the study or teaching of art appreciation, home planning, furnishing and decorating

To the student, the teacher or the layman who is trying to better his living by learning, this Exhibition of "The Arts of Daily Living" is exciting material for study. It is a "visual aid" of the highest order and demonstrates the new concept of art as an integral part of daily experience. Each exhibit room could serve as the basis for a "lesson assignment" in an art education program. It is material which makes concrete the abstract elements of design and color.

If you are lucky enough to see the rooms themselves, you have, of course, the ideal learning situation. If not, a meaningful appreciation of their inherent art value can be gained by experiencing them through pictures and descriptions in the accompanying articles. To make this magazine content more useful for general art instruction, for group or individual home study, certain advice is offered below.

Let's call this a "home study session" and learn first:

HOW TO BEGIN:

Whenever I talk to Women's Club groups or to my professional-art-school students, the most frequent question is, "Where do I start?" or "How do you begin to decorate a room?" The answer is the obvious one: Start with the person who will live in the room. Start with YOU. Let's see how this principle was carried out:

1. Room for a Woman who Embroiders and Collects Embroideries (page 169). From this exampl let's work backward, and, since y are the student, suppose you do bit of studying. Look at the beau ful color photograph of a roo which was designed around PERSON and read the brief a count given by its planners. Th room, like the other 21 rooms the Exhibition, answers these qu tions about its owner:

What is her hobby: How is utilized and developed? Wh other interest is indicated?

Is she practical? Orderly?

Do you think she has a mai

Or many children?

Is she dramatic or drab?

Does she face life confident and honestly?

Is she young or old?

Your room should tell as mu about you and as much about t other persons who live in it.

2. A Studio for a Person W Makes Mosiacs (page 173). Now look at another room wh expresses a hobby (or vocation) a different way. Here is a pers who loves and uses every p of his "work" in his decorat scheme. The tesserae (the sm stones which make mosaics) kept not in chest drawers or ca board boxes, but have been in plastic, transparent refrigera containers and stored on b shelves. They are every bit as d rative as books, more exciting cause of their novelty, complet functional. (You can readily p the box you need.) Note nches that are kept out of the y until needed. the plastic-top rk table properly lighted. There no frustrations here in function, m or color. They each have a rpose and a decorative value.

Vow look again at yourself. Are a carpenter who has a base-nt workshop? Tools hung on a ll could serve a decorative as ll as useful purpose. (See HOUSE AUTIFUL, April 1954, page 156.)
you hook rugs, your loom and orful woolen threads can be r point of departure in the livroom. They certainly needn't go the basement. (See page 169.)
now a child's room which has its only wall decoration a col-ion of dolls hung on nails.
f you are a teacher, don't assign r students a Louis XVI interior, ian Renaissance or French vincial. Do get them to plan a n around their immediate needs wants, i. e., their "popular" ords, a model car collection or indow seat. If the syllabus calls period assignments and cannot ignored, introduce students to imaginary individual of the s, with definite character traits interests. Let them plan for

AT TO BEGIN WITH:

nce you decide on the individqualities to express (judged your wants and day-to-day s), you must set about making real. This is where things in.

you like to read, you will make your kitchen the most degree of interest determines character of your room. Look

r the basic furnishings are n't forget to plan in the same or accessories. Don't plan an y just to catch ashes; it can express you too. Will you use a brass bowl, a glass bowl, a bright enameled or ceramic one or stoneware? Will you buy a machine-produced object, order from that craftsman in your neighborhood or the one you read about in HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, or find something in an antique shop? Perhaps you will like stainless steel flatware on your table and silver fixtures in your bathroom. Study the accessories in A Bedroom-Dressing Room Suite on pages 194-198.

THE OTHER SIDE OF THE PICTURE:

"I can express myself in things," you say, "but I don't know how to put them together."

Think for a moment about your clothes. You are not likely to wear that blue taffeta formal with your red sport sandals, even though one glorifies your eyes and the other minimizes your feet. Planning a room calls for the same techniques as planning a costume. Fortunately, you have many costumes. We hope you have many rooms. But now,

WE PLAN FOR ONE:

1. The first basic principle of good design is UNITY. Our "visual aid" is that Room to Be Alone In (pages 182-187). The principal unifying factor in this case is the diamond, triangle and V shape—all really part of one motif.

Look next at the Scandinavian-American Dining Alcove (page 170). Starting with a tapestry, UNITY is achieved by repetition of its pattern in the rug; repetition of its colors in upholstery, drapery fabrics and rug; repetition of its basic rectangular shape in chests, shutters, rugs. Unity is not always achieved by repetition. BALANCE is another means. Note the formal balance of the wall composition in the Scandinavian-American Dining Alcove with its tapestry and settee as center interest, symmetrical arrangement of chests on either side. Informal balance is less easy for the beginner to achieve; this comes with sensitivity to proportions, developed through experience. It usually gives a room greater flexibility. (See Center of Living for the Whole Family, pages 204-209.)

2. The principle of DOMINANCE is used in planning your color scheme. Again, think of your costume. You should have a dominant color, a subordinate color and (one or more) accent colors.

ordinate color is black, the accent colors are gold and shocking pink. (Note that the dominant color is a unifying factor: so is the repeated use of embroidery pieces.)

Accent colors lend excitement and should never be overdone, otherwise you have no accent. Look at the blue-green settee in the Scandinavian-American room, the bright red, on butterflies, inside-of-bowl, service plates, in the enameled-butterflies dining room.

Look back at the Hi-Fi Room (page 169). Can you name two accent colors here?

Many other design elements enter the professional analysis. However they all refer back to the concept of organic design (dictionary definition: characterized by correlation and co-operation of parts) which means that you, your wants and needs, should determine your room; your rooms will determine your house; and the whole will express that "outer self" from which the world can gain some concept of the important "inner" you.

Ralph Waldo Emerson's Essay on Art prophesies the end of the distinction between fine art and useful art.

Arts and the Man by Irwin Edman (available in pocket-sized edition) gives the philosophy of the new concept. It discusses not only the plastic arts but poetry, prose and music too.

Arts for Daily Living, by Edwin Ziegfeld and M. E. Smith, discusses the Owatonna Art Education Project which undertook, in the 1930's, to prove the hypothesis that art is a way of life, an integral part of daily experience. This experiment formulated the content and methods of a new type of art program for the schools and the community. This book is ideal for teachers.

The Relation of the Arts to Education and Society, by A. Barclay Russell, in Art Education Today, 1951-52, abstracts the principle that art enlarges the human spirit, that the creative faculties of a person keep him alive and productive.

The Autobiography of Frank Lloyd Wright is the single most important work on architecture that has been written. It is a must.

Winter-Hardy Azaleas and Rhododendrons by Clement G. Bowers. Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Boston, 1954. $3.

Here in Connecticut the rhododendron is the most satisfactory of all flowering shrubs, as in my native state of Rhode Island. Rhododendrons grow wild in any woodland that offers them enough moisture (farmers call them "swamp bush"). It wasn't until I gardened in Michigan, and later in Iowa that I learned at first hand how difficult it can be to grow this "easiest of all shrubs."

The hard water, and the consequent alkaline pH of the soil, usually given as the source of the trouble. But now we are discovering that the combination of proper shading plus foliage feeding and generous watering, especially through the autumn months, open almost all of America to successful rhododendron culture. Certainly no shrub is so consistently spectacular, so rewarding to grow.

I wrote about rhododendrons last April, on page 165, and included a recommendation on what kinds to grow by Dr. Clement G. Bowers, America's leading expert on rhododendrons, the author of the prized and too-long-out-of-print Rhododendrons and Azaleas. (Dr. Bowers hopes to bring out a new edition of his scholarly book.) Meanwhile he has been prevailed upon to write a smaller and less technical book specifically for the amateur gardener. The result is the brief and extremely useful Winter-Hardy Azaleas and Rhododendrons, a slim volume well worth the $3 cost, and is published by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society as part of their 125th anniversary celebration. It is edited with the usual superb style that might well serve as a guide for other publishers of garden books and so save us from the rash of inexpertly written and poorly edited ones we are subject to at present.

Dr. Bowers clears away the ice that rhododendrons (the sensible lumps the azaleas and rhododendrons into one group) are something special and only for the initiated. His directions for their culture can lead anyone to success barring geographical restrictions.

One last caution: It is common practice in rhododendron growing to label everything that grows from a certain cross as a single variety. This practice leads to vast differences within a variety. Know your nursery before you order.—J. E.

Wrap the big hand around the little hand . . . for now begins a little heart's journey into prayer . . . the guide is Dad, the goal is a security not even he can provide.

But the pattern is security, and it is Dad's privilege to supply his part of it for the little hearts in his care.

In this binding, enclosing love life finds its finest answer.

The security of our homes is our worthiest goal. And providing it is a privilege unique in a country like ours, where each of us is free to choose his way.

And, think: The security that begins in your home, joined to that of other homes, builds the strength of America.

Saving for security is easy! Here's a savings system that really works—the Payroll Savings Plan for investing in United States Savings Bonds.

This is all you do. Go to your company's pay office, choose the amount you want to save—a couple of dollars a payday, or as much as you wish. That money will be set aside for you before you even draw your pay. And automatically invested in Series "E" Savings Bonds which are delivered over to you.

If you can save only $3.75 a week on the Plan, in 9 years and 8 months you will have $2,137.30.

U.S. Series "E" Savings Bonds earn interest at an average of 3% a year, compounded semiannually, when held to maturity! And they can go on earning interest for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish, paying you back 80% more than you put in!

PANTRY SHELF NEWS

By JULIE POLSHEK

Fearn's have done so little to acquaint the public with their Instant Meat Tenderizer that it's likely to escape attention even if you saw it on a store shelf. Their tenderizer is well known in hotel and restaurant kitchens and used by even the finest of them (hope this isn't a trade secret). A fact sure to surprise you, as it did me, is that chefs use the tenderizer principally for improving choice steaks. Inane as this may sound, you'll find from first-hand experience that the tenderizer has a magical way of enhancing meat's natural flavor and succulence.

I asked Fearn's why and how their product accomplishes this. One major factor, I was told, is the unusual formulation they've evolved which achieves tenderization by enzymes such as is normally affected by hanging meats for aging.

The instant action of the product is also a notable technological feat and a great convenience to the user. You apply the tenderizer at the time you're ready to cook the meat, simply rubbing the liquid sparsely over the meat's surfaces; that done, you pop it forthwith into the broiler or proceed with whatever other cooking method the meat has been slated for.

I hope you haven't been left with the idea that use of Fearn's tenderizer should be confined to prime meats. Economy cuts also come into its province, as does fowl. Straight down the line, it affords tenderizing that's coupled with improvement of meat flavor.

Mail orders for Fearn Instant Meat Tenderizer will be serviced by Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York, at a postpaid price of $1.50 for two 4-ounce jars. They also can supply Fearn's fine concentrated bases for soups and flavoring purposes, which we reviewed in May.

A new Knorr-Swiss achievement, bouillon cubes, reached the American market recently. Once you've tried them, you'll never again settle for anything less. One variety is Instant Clear Chicken Soup Cube, whose nature is self-explanatory; the second, Instant Clear Soup Cube, blends chicken stock, beef extract and chicken fat in proportions that yield a rich flavor.

For soup-making you simply dissolve the cubes in boiling water. The end result is indistinguishable from homemade soup stock. The cubes can also be utilized for gravies, aspics and no end of food-flavoring purposes. For purposes such as flavoring meat loaves, the cubes can be crumbled and used in dry state.

It's pertinent, while on the matter of Knorr-Swiss products, to mention that since my June '53 report on Knorr-Swiss dehydrated soups, two further varieties have become available. One is green pea soup; the other Celestine Soup, a superb clear consommé garnished with shredded pancakes.

All Knorr-Swiss products are available on mail-order from Gimbel's Herald Square, New York, if they aren't in your local shops. Bouillon cubes, packed two to a box, are priced at 18 cents for either variety. The dehydrated soups cost 29 cents per packet; the varieties include two mentioned plus asparagus, mushroom, onion, egg-drop, chicken-noodle. (Minimum mail order, $3.)

Cherry Hut makes a trio of luscious sweet-cherry products comprising jelly, preserves and a conserve in which cherries are united with oranges, lemons and pecan nuggets. The delicious products have the benefit of the rich-flavored cherries that grow in Northern Michigan's cherry belt. Orchard and preserving kitchen adjoin each other, affording what could be called a tree-to-cauldron operation. Fruit and sugar are the only ingredients of Cherry Hut's products; this plus the preserving methods used give an end-result that tastes homemade and retains the flavor and tang of the fresh fruit. It all adds up to some very good eating.

Packed in 16-ounce jars, the trio costs $1.85; or you can order the products in 5-ounce size in which case six jars (2 each of jelly, preserves and conserve) cost $1.90. (Postage not included in these prices.) The ordering address is Cherry Hut, Beulah, Michigan.

If convenience is your incentive for using instant coffee, you may want to avail yourself of a further convenience—premeasured instant coffee. The Selco product in point comes to you in sealed aluminum-foil packets. Tear off the top, empty the packet's contents into a cup, add boiling water and that's that. It's coffee of top quality and you can, for gift purposes, order the packets personalized with a monogram or name. The price for plain or personalized packets is $2.50 postpaid for a box of 25, and the source is Selco Coffee Co., 110 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Cap'n's Corners has a way of periodically branching out into food ventures that go far afield from its lobster business. Pheasant-raising is its latest venture. Having feasted on one of the superb birds, I'd say that Cap'n's Corners has "built the better mousetrap." The Maine-raised pheasant, a Mongolian variety, tips the scales at four pounds which I'm told is record weight for pheasants. The distinctive quality of the flavor of the bird lends gustatory pleasure difficult to put into words. The meat, without being gamy, has rich pheasant taste which must have to do with some natural characteristic of this particular pheasant variety because it's not found in other pheasants raised under semi-wild conditions. It may be a point of interest to you that the breed originated from eggs flown from China before China was closed by the Iron Curtain.

The birds come to you quick-frozen, wrapped in pliofilm, ready to pop into a roasting pan. Four people can be lavishly fed on one pheasant, so $14.95 postpaid for a brace of two birds permits you to feast royally without undue twinge of conscience budget-wise. To insure safe arrival of shipments slated for areas south of Washington, D. C., and those west of Chicago, Cap'n's Corners uses plane transportation; in such cases you're charged slightly more for he shipping expense.

You may also be interested in getting acquainted with Cap'n's Corners' two-pound one-claw lobsters, an unusual variety they specialize in, which have an unusually lavish meat yield and are especially desirable for broiling or baking. Six of the huskies cost $14.95 plus shipping charge.

For New England sea food specialties for pantry shelf storage, my vote goes to those packed by Jack Augustsen's restaurant in Northampton, Massachusetts. You may recall my enthusiastic send-off of their clam chowder in the April column; we now run the tasting gamut of their other products and the experience evoked similar approval. They have a fish chowder that tastes homemade, rich with pieces of white fish and diced Maine potatoes. Their concentrated lobster stew is pungently flavored with sherry wine and there's a generous amount of lobster meat in large, firm chunks. The product can be served just as it comes out of the can, for Newburg serving or supplemented with milk for a soup course. Clam Cakes, another of the products, requires only the addition of an egg and some cracker meal to ready it for sautéing or deep-fat frying, and you get patties that taste as though they had been made from fresh clams. This fresh-from savor is also present in August's minced clams, tender bits that lend themselves admirably to omelette-making, canapé use in clam cheese or whatever other use you fancy.

A gift-packed assortment containing 4 cans of clam chowder, 2 of fish chowder, 2 of minced clams and one each of lobster stew and clam cakes can be had for $5.95. A 2-can shipment of the individual products in the aforenamed order, costs $5.95, $5.95, $4.75, $4.75, $4.25. All of the prices are postpaid for shipments to points east of the Mississippi; add $1 in each instance if you reside west of that boundary.

Here's a new tossed-salad dressing of California origin that is both exotic and extremely tasty. Las Hierbas salad dressing is made from a recipe that goes back to California's Mission days and derives its very distinctive and rich flavor from a bouquet of rare herbs and spices. I wasn't able to ferret out any information on what specific varieties the herbs and spices are, but they certainly aren't usual ones. The olive oil used in the dressing is a very light-bodied variety which is altogether right in flavor balance for the other ingredients. Although the blend has a mellow quality, it's not lacking in the tang accent that tossed-green salad calls for.

Those who find it necessary to order by mail can be serviced by R. H. Macy & Co., Herald Square, New York, on a minimum order of $3. One bottle costs 54 cents.

Hampshire Manor's flavored popcorn comprises an interesting variety of bleu cheese, garlic, smoke, cheddar. Along with flavoring interest, the popped kernels have airily tender texture and quality that's not encountered in run-of-the-mill popcorn. If you get hold of some, try it as a soup garnish: for an interesting change from croutons. Apropos of cocktail use of the popcorn, it comes in attractive, tall tins that can be used for serving. An assortment of six cans are $2.45 postpaid from Charles & Co., 340 Madison Ave., New York.

I have to thank a reader of this column for making me acquainted with a Mexican hors d'oeuvres, Pickled Jalapeños Chilies. The fiery quality of the green chili pods isn't for the timid, but if you aren't averse to that aspect, you'll find the exotic delicacy teams up with a highball in admirable fashion. The chilies come stuffed with shrimp, red snapper, salmon or sardine and with all the varieties chili and stuffing are flavored by the olive and sesame oils, contained in the spiced pickling agent.

The price of Clemente Jaques Jalapeño Chilies is $1.27 for a 12-ounce can, which applies to all the stuffing varieties. The product can be ordered from A. M. & J. Solari, Ltd., New Orleans, Louisiana.

BeLeane's low-calorie chocolates have acquired such a following that another low-calorie candy has been developed by this organization. The new one, Wonderjel, is a delicious gumdrop-type candy that's rated at only 3 calories per piece. The box contains an assortment of fruit flavors that include cherry, orange and lemon, and in each instance fresh fruit is used as the flavoring agent. To my way of thinking, these jelly candies are superior to many of the conventional gumdrops one encounters.

If your local shops don't have this BeLeane product, you can obtain it by mail from Vendome Inc., 415 Madison Ave., New York, at a postpaid price of $1.50 per box.

PHOTOGRAPH BY F. S. LINCOLN

Who says a pool has to be large to be effective? Here's a basin just 2″ deep, set in the edge of a lawn and fringed by low plants. It catches reflections of sky and trees as well as a larger pool, and is much easier to move around.

If you know a starry-eyed bride, or even if you just feel like one—you'll want to see the Winter issue of House Beautiful's GUIDE FOR THE BRIDE. For in it, is featured a fresh, exciting house—a house as new as tomorrow, planned especially for brides.

The Bride's House of 1954 is chock-full of building and decorating ideas, ideas planned to brighten the lives of brides-on-a-budget.

Of course, House Beautiful's GUIDE FOR THE BRIDE includes lots of other useful information, too. There are wonderful wonderful winter wedding fashions, and all the data needed for the wedding —and after.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL'S

GUIDE FOR THE BRIDE

Look for it at leading newsstands, after October 14, or reserve your copy by sending 50¢ to Guide for the Bride, Dept. 605, 572 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y.

CLARENCE PRENTICE, LANDSCAPE NURSERYMAN

If you line your pool with quarried or sharp-edged stone, use creeping groundcovers or low-growing flowering alpines to soften rough edges. Keep mortared joints inconspicuous to preserve natural appearance.

Landscape architect John Grant has used a pool to separate the lawn from perennial and shrub border. Moat-like pool is only inches deep, yet it is very effective in reflecting the colors of sky and flowers.

Try a pool in the shady spot where few if any plants will grow. This pool in the pleasant garden of Mr. & Mrs. Donald Graham in Seattle, Washington, is a cool, tranquil retreat during hot summer days.

Protects children, pets and property

An Anchor Fence keeps children and pets safe from harm. Keeps out intruders. Increases property value.

What's more, an Anchor Fence requires no yearly painting or repair. An Anchor Fence is permanent. Sturdy. Remains erect in any soil.

So insist on Anchor Chain Link Fence . . . the fence with the zinc coating applied after weaving - not before. Look for the famous orange and black Anchor Fence nameplate. For more information on Anchor Fence, write for free illustrated pamphlet.

Pre-winter is the time for precaution

a little care now can do your trees a lot of good

Look now as Fall approaches. Are any of your precious trees dropping their leaves too soon? Did any seem too sparse this summer? They may need feeding.

Now is an excellent time to feed your trees, for the roots will be active long after frost has nipped the leaves. And trees do need feeding like all your other plantings—but even more for trees, because they're so much bigger. Damage from summer storms should also be cared for now.

Davey experts diagnose all kinds of tree troubles, those that arise from worn out soil and those that may have been started by the rigors of summer's drouth or insects or fungi.

Call your nearest Davey representative for an estimate of pre-winter care—bracing of weak forks, cabling of old limbs against the ripping weight of winter snows and wind; the pruning away of dead branches, as well as the all-important fertilizing.

Davey service is expert—done by men thoroughly trained at the Davey Institute of Tree Service and equipped with the most modern machines for tree care. Look in your phone book now for "Davey".

GARDEN OF N. ABKHAZI, VICTORIA, CANADA

Convert an unused gully or low place in the garden into a pool. Expose outcroppings of stone, if any, and fill in crevices along the edge with bog plants. Low-growing shrubs and rock-garden plants cover the banks.

Build a group planting to mark a garden boundary or screen an unwanted view with a pool used as a focal point. Surrounded with flowering plants, the pool retains its interest all through the growing season.

The strong textures of evergreens will make your pool attractive year round. Here azaleas and rhododendrons in bloom contrast with varied textures of water and big stones at the California Spring Garden Show.

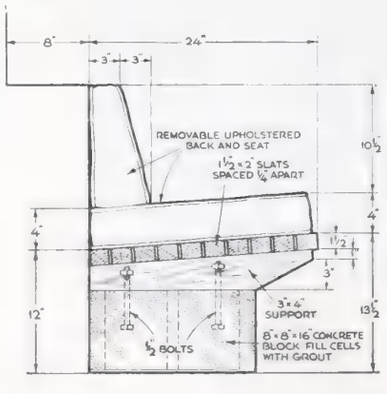
BUILD COMFORT INTO YOUR GARDEN SEATS



Tailor-made upholstered cushions on a well-proportioned bench make this corner of the garden a comfortable, practical place for relaxation. Seat is built into corner protected from drafts and shaded by walls.

With the cushions removed, the sturdy wooden slat and concrete block construction of the built-in bench is highlighted. Bench is nestled into bend of the wall, becoming an integral part of the architecture.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Construction sketch, left, shows how to build garden seat above. Then bench is supported by concrete blocks which blend into a wall of the same material. The red wood slat framework is placed on a base which is slanted for comfortable seating. Removable cushions have a weather-resistant covering and follow the sloping angle of the bench. Such construction provides an outdoor seat with indoor comforts and attractiveness.

A TRIAL MEMBERSHIP: For an obvious reason this can fairly be described as an "opportunity of a lifetime." To obtain such a work without cost is certainly something extraordinary. The complete set is offered—in this Trial Membership—to demonstrate three things about the Book-of-the-Month Club, important to every book-reading family.

★ FIRST: that as a member of the Club you are kept from missing the important books you want to read. For example, all six of these Churchill books were regular Club Selections.

★ SECOND: that you get such books from the Club at a considerable saving. For example, the regular retail price for each of these Churchill volumes is $6.00; the price to Club members is only $4.00. Last year, on the average, the price paid by Club members for Selections was 27% less than the retail price.

★ THIRD: that, on top of this, you share in approximately $1,000,000 worth of books distributed free, every month, to members as Book-Dividends. These six Churchill volumes may be considered "advanced" Book-Dividends, earned by the purchase of the six books you engage to buy later.

CONDITIONS OF THIS OFFER

★ YOU AGREE TO BUY AS FEW AS SIX BOOKS within your first year of membership from among the Club Selections and Alternates. During the year at least 100 good books will be made available to you, from which you may choose. You receive a careful advance description of each Selection and if you think it is a book you would not enjoy, you send back a form (always provided) specifying some other book you may want. Or you may say: "Send me nothing."

★ YOU WILL RECEIVE ALL SIX VOLUMES OF THE SECOND WORLD WAR AT ONCE—with the first book you order from the Club. For a list of good books from which you can choose your first selection, please see coupon.

★ AFTER BUYING SIX BOOKS—and as long as you remain a member—you will receive a Book-Dividend with every second book you buy—a beautiful or useful library volume. This member profit-sharing is similar to what happens in any consumer co-operative. A fixed percentage of what each member pays is set aside in a special fund. This is finally invested in enormous editions of other books, each of which is a Book-Dividend sent free to members.

★ YOU MAY CANCEL YOUR MEMBERSHIP any time after buying six books. Membership in the Club is for no fixed period, continuing until notice of cancellation is received from the member.

This blanket of air in walls of glass

Home of Mrs. C. Lockhart McKelvy, Perrysburg, Ohio. Room and furnishings designed by Clare J. Hoffman, Perrysburg.

These walls of glass were built for comfort—for they are *Thermopane insulating glass. You can sit closer to these windows without feeling chilly because Thermopane reduces drafts. But comfort is only part of the story. Thermopane's insulation cuts heating bills, and reduces the chance of condensation forming on the glass to mar the view.

Thermopane provides benefits in summer, too, for it insulates against outdoor heat. And your rooms are quieter all year, because Thermopane muffles outside noise. Thermopane gives you these benefits without any bother with storm sash. This insulating windowpane is installed when you build or remodel and stays there for good. It's wonderful to have it in every window of your home.

Thermopane is stocked by Libbey·Owens·Ford Glass Distributors for ready delivery. Call your L·O·F Distributor or Dealer for full information. He's listed in the yellow pages of phone books in many principal cities. For our free booklet, "Self-insulating Windows of Thermopane", write to Dept. 11114, */R

INSULATING GLASS

For better vision, specify Thermopane made with Polished Plate Glass

SAVE MONEY with Thermopane. Heat loss through Thermopane with ½" air space is only half that through single-pane windows. You save fuel.

SAVE WORK. Thermopane makes windows self-insulating. No storm sash to buy, wash, hang, take down and store. It's a great labor saver.

CLEARER WINDOWS. There is far less chance of condensation forming on Thermopane than on single glass. Windows stay drier, hence cleaner.

COOLER ROOMS in summer. Thermopane's layer of dry air keeps out more summer heat. That reduces load on air-conditioning units.

TWO SOMBER MEN and a RHAPSODY

By RICHARD WILLIAMS

Don't judge the composer by his composition. Don't gather facts about the musician through the music. The dour man may produce delightful music: the gentle genius may storm in bitter accents.

Two morose, unsmiling and reserved men collaborated on a witty, charming and open-handed piece of music. "Collaborated" is perhaps not the word, for over a century of time divided the lives of the two men. "Inspired" is more accurate. Paganini inspired Rachmaninoff. Whether that inspiration had a purely musical cause or whether Rachmaninoff was attracted to Paganini by a certain kinship he felt to the Italian's nature, it is impossible to say. The fact remains that, unlikely as the choice may have seemed, Rachmaninoff did chose one of Paganini's most famous melodies and composed his most famous set of variations from this melody. The official title of this composition is: Rhapsody on a Theme of Paganini for Piano and Orchestra, Op. 43.

The personalities of these two men had, as I have indicated, some characteristics in common. One was a Russian, and a certain amount of pessimism would not come as a surprise from a Russian. Paganini was an Italian, but as un-sunny an Italian as you could ever meet. "His body," writes Sacheverell Sitwell in an excellent description, "was completely fleshless and his limbs were mere bones, everything being sacrificed, so it seems, for his long hands and talon-like fingers . . . The long tails of his coat were preternaturally thin and flapping; his collar and cravat were formless and hardly visible, for his jaws, by long custom, leaned down to hold his violin, and were thus foreve

...come into your home with a STEINWAY

BEAUTIFUL BABY GRAND—It has the glowing golden tone and majestic presence that belong only to the Steinway. It can be delivered to your home by your Steinway dealer for as little down as . . . $271.00 Liberal terms Slightly higher in the West

You cannot measure, in dollars and cents, the overtones of value in a Steinway. There is the glory of tone that uplifts listeners; the power the Steinway has to enrich the home, to release tensions and calm cares; and the pleasure you have in creating pleasure. Above all, there is the gentle authority the Steinway holds for the child, pointing beyond distractions of the gadget age to strength and sufficiency in things of beauty. Values like these do not come automatically. The Steinway, which depreciates so little over the years, is an investment in the inner wealth that life shares so abundantly with those who look for its treasure.

Most of the world's great artists use the Steinway exclusively—Among them are Artur Rubinstein, pictured at right, and great names like Bruchollerie, Cantelli, Lateiner, Dorothy Maynor, Milstein, Mitropoulos, Morley & Gearhart, Novaes, Solomon, Szell, Tureck . . . also nearly all of the nation's leading orchestras, radio and television stations.

Our booklet, "How to Choose Your Piano," will be sent free if you write Steinway & Sons, Steinway Hall, 109 West 57th Street, New York.

WALTER GIESEKING

To the truly great artist, his piano is as personal as his signature... and is chosen for its superlative interpretation of his touch. The world's most renowned pianists choose Baldwin not alone for the Beautiful Baldwin Tone but for the integrity of craftsmanship that makes each Baldwin piano a masterpiece. This is the genius of Baldwin: to the artist, a Baldwin Concert Grand is always his piano, "answering" with the same clear, vibrant voice whenever his fingers touch its keyboard into life.

At home, as on the concert stage, that Beautiful Baldwin Tone is a constant joy and source of pride. For perfection in performance is the most potent invitation to explorations into music. For pure delight in both the beauty and musical perfection of your piano, choose Baldwin.

sunk upon his chest." He suffered from tuberculosis of the throat, so that it was nearly impossible for him to eat solid food. He spoke in a toneless whisper. A quack dentist had removed almost all his teeth, so that his cheeks were further sunk in. To accentuate this ghastly mien, Paganini wore dark blue glasses.

His ghoulish appearance and his fabulous prowess on the violin combined to weave all kinds of legends about Paganini. Many people quite seriously believed that he had sold his soul to the Devil. And this belief was corroborated by the fact that he was never known to practice. How successful and sensational this virtuoso was you can judge from his finances: In spite of his mania for gambling, in spite of his losing a fortune in the establishment of a gambling house, the "Casino Paganini," he was able to leave his illegitimate son some four hundred thousand dollars.

PAGANINI was extremely suspicious and secretive. Many of his compositions have been lost or are incompletely preserved because he hated to publish them lest any one pry into the secret of his technique. At rehearsals with an orchestra, he would never play the cadenza but would simply turn to the musicians and say, "Et cetera, Messieurs." As soon as the rehearsal was over, he would collect all the parts from the musicians' stands so that nobody could copy them.

If you have ever heard Rachmaninoff play—an unforgettable experience—you will remember his strange appearance, his trancelike preoccupation as he walked like an over-life-sized puppet to the center of the stage, sank into what seemed an absent reverie, and then slowly turned to the instrument of which he was a master. You will remember his reserve, almost a coldness, in the midst of triumph. Somber he was and withdrawn, elegant and aloof, disclosing himself to only the fewest of friends. He, too, was "unsunny," and indeed his life was intermittently clouded by attacks of lassitude and melancholy. In short, a man from whom one might expect "The Isle of the Dead" but hardly the Paganini Variations or the Second Piano Concerto, which rivals the Variations in popularity.

Paganini's published Opus No. 1 is a set of twenty-four Caprices for the violin. These dazzling pieces have exercised a fascination on several composers. Schumann used them and so did Liszt. The twenty-fourth caprice inspired Brahms to write not one but two sets of variations for the piano, twenty-eight in all. Even Paganini himself used the themes for eleven "bravura" pieces, though curiously enough these, Paganini's own, are almost completely forgotten.

Some very strong attraction must have spun itself from the theme to Rachmaninoff for him to have decided to use a melody which so famous a composer as Brahms had treated exhaustively. Unafraid of odious comparisons, he took the theme and fashioned, through the peculiar and universal flexibility which resides in music, from this Italian melody previously treated by a German, a thoroughly Russian work.

Prior to the Rhapsody, Rachmaninoff had not composed anything for a long time, having passed through a period of despondency and self-doubt. The Rhapsody called him back to life. He composed it while vacationing at Lake Lucerne in Switzerland. The work was finished in August, just before

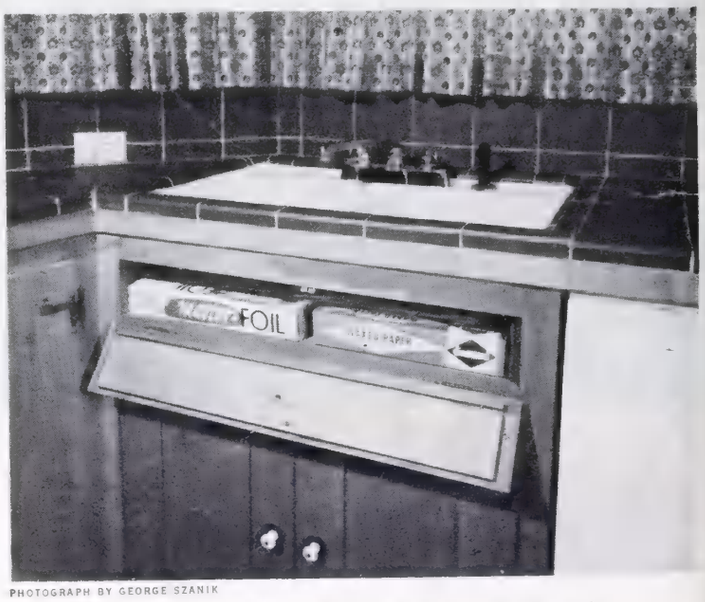
Rachmaninoff was due to return to America. It was given its première twenty years ago this month, on November 7, 1934, at a Philadelphia Orchestra concert in Baltimore, with Rachmaninoff as soloist and Stokowski conducting. The work enjoyed an immediate and jubilant success. The recording made shortly after the concert still stands as a landmark in the art of recording. No one has surpassed Rachmaninoff in the playing of Rachmaninoff.

It is all easy music, exciting, melodious and romantic, and one of the most popular works of our century, though one would not speak of it as "modern" music. It is of course a favorite of piano virtuosos of all nationalities. Twenty years old this month, its popularity shows no sign of abating. So graceful and captivating is the Rhapsody that it can serve as an introduction to concerto music for many people who might be awed by the very term "concerto." The eighteenth variation has a melody quite sufficiently romantic and haunting as to possess all the ingredients of a good popular tune. Somebody finally discovered this fact and used it as a theme song for a film. The film was not much good and didn't create much of an impression, but the melody became a hit and remained for some weeks on the chart of best-selling "pop" bits. It is doubtful that Rachmaninoff would have relished such fame. Paganini might have.



Recommended recordings of Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody:

William Kapell, Pianist. Fritz Reiner conducting the Robin Hood Dell Orchestra.

Sergei Rachmaninoff, Pianist. Leopold Stokowski conducting the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Artur Rubinstein, Pianist. Walter Süsskind conducting the Philharmonia Orchestra.

PHOTOGRAPH BY GEORGE SZANIK

Even if it's measured in inches, storage space is valuable—particularly in a kitchen. The trick in utilizing it is in determining what can be stored where. Here, those scant inches just between sink and cabinets below allow just enough room, in the most convenient spot, for constantly used rolls of waxed paper and aluminum foil.

it's cushioned with cotton

A new way to be noncommittal about the bar

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Two recesses around a fireplace are admirably utilized and more admirably concealed in this room of the E. E. Fogelsons. A bar is housed in one, a writing desk in the other. Closed, wall presents unbroken appearance. Doors drop into floor hydraulically. Burton Schutt, architect.

For those who wish to offer drinks without at the same time presenting themselves or their visitors with a permanent, ever-present bar always on view, this clever device has special meaning.

Operating hydraulically, the doors drop down into the floor and out of sight when the owners wish to expose either the bar or the writing desk for use. With the doors closed, as in the upper photograph, the wall is an architectural whole, not only completely concealing both the bar and the desk but also obliterating the two recesses formed by the projecting fireplace.

There are, of course, other and less elaborate ways of having a bar and hiding it too that people have contrived for their homes. There are ready-made pieces of furniture that are specially designed to perform this trick. There are also methods of incorporating a bar in a storage wall with a simple door to shut it off when it is out of play.

The important point here is not the method employed, but the attitude expressed. There is neither the notion flagrantly indicating that drinking is as much fun as, say, listening to music, and should be as much a part of the furnishings as a piano; nor is there the other extreme of refusing to have alcoholic beverages in the house. A compromise solution is reached here which satisfies both attitudes.

After our cooks have baked these delectable hams, basting them continually in the finest Sherry Wine, they are ready for feasts in the most gracious homes. AMBER BRAND SMITHFIELD HAMS are ready to carve and serve—require no refrigeration. Here is a splendid Holiday Gift for your treasured friends, business associates and family that will be thoroughly enjoyed and long remembered.

WHO Spends Two Dollars For a Dust Cloth? AND WHY?

Two dollars is a lot of money for a dust cloth. At that price, who buys them? Here's a partial list of buyers of our Conniver, whose names may be familiar to you:

Mrs. Ben Hecht—he co-authored "The Front Page"
Lillian Hellman—you know her from The Theatre Guild
HMS "Queen Elizabeth"—best known ocean liner afloat
Countess Mara—the well known necktie people
Mrs. Samuel F. B. Morse—a name we all know
Ilka Chase—if you read, or watch TV, you know her
U. S. Library of Congress—and N. Y. Public Library
Kenneth Roberts—he wrote "Northwest Passage"
The Mark Hopkins Hotel—San Francisco's finest

Should you spend two dollars just because these buyers did? No, not necessarily. But you should know WHY they splurged—so that you can decide for yourself.

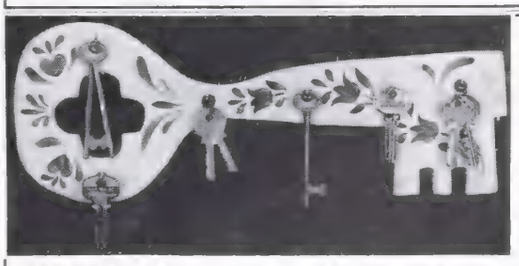
Here is Why the Buyers Buy . . .

People buy Conniver (and then buy it again!) because it absolutely ends dirt-cling. A touch on any surface—wood, glass, metal, porcelain, plastic or leather—and it instantly applies a tough but invisible film that simply will not hold on to dust or dirt. The result is that anything wiped with Conniver is afterward beautifully cleaned and polished with just a flick of the cloth. That's because Silicone is the finest "release material" known to science. (A release material keeps anything from sticking to anything else.) Reader's Digest has raved about it. Big industry uses tons of it. And Conniver contains more Silicone than any other maker has yet been able to get into a cloth! And the Silicone stays in, too.

Use Conniver on woodwork, furniture, mirrors, porcelain and chrome kitchen appliances, windows—everywhere in your home. It won't hide or discolor any finish, but it will enhance lustre. Get one for the car, because then you can wash it dry, with just a wipe. By the way, regular use of Conniver prevents the formation of both rust and tarnish. Nice to know that, if you own silverware, or if there are guns, golf clubs, garden tools and such around the house.

You clean Conniver just by shaking it. Or, if you prefer, dunk it in a mild detergent solution. It will come up smiling, because the Silicone is there for keeps!

We Guarantee It—To the Hilt!



We just don't know how to write a stronger Guarantee than the one we've put on Conniver. We say that if Conniver doesn't do everything we promised, we'll instantly refund your money—and you may keep the cloth! There are no strings on this. You are the judge.

Conniver buyers know that every word we've said is true. You will know too—so mail us your order right now.

We sell Conniver in two sizes. The standard 12x18-inch Conniver is $2.00 (or three for $5.00). And the double-size 18x24-inch deluxe Conniver is $3.00 (or three for $8.00). We pay the postage, but we cannot accept C.O.D. orders.

You buy Conniver by mail—only from us in all the country. And we Guarantee that you'll be glad you did!

JR. PLANETARIUM

Give them the sky for Christmas!

Here's a wonderful, almost miraculous instrument that projects about 300 stars, all the major constellations on your walls and ceiling . . . exactly as they appear . . . any time, any place in the northern hemisphere. Just plug it into your AC current in a darkened room, "set" the sky to suit you, and the sparkling brilliance of the spheres unfolds like magic before your incredulous eyes. Completely scientific and accurate, it's designed by the maker of famous Spitz Planetariums. You can make the stars come up from the East, then set in the West. You can dim or increase their brilliance. You can even "set" the sky as it was when the Star of Bethlehem guided the Wise Men! A whole new world of educational fun for children—and their fascinated parents. We recommend it for youngsters from 9 to 90.

Guaranteed to give special pleasure to hard-to-please friends and favorite clients. 7-15 lbs. $1.75 per lb.

Trains plants—makes them healthier—displays them to best advantage

All ivy-type plants grow better on a moss stick because plants put new roots out into the moss as they continue to grow. A watering device in the stick keeps moss uniformly damp, feeding all roots and making healthy, thick foliage.

An ivy-covered moss stick can be combined with other plants in a planter for an interesting effect or used a one. Makes a thoughtful gift. To make your plants grow faster, live longer, look lovelier, use HI GROW MOSS STICKS . . .

new mother

The love that makes a doll her baby is the beginning of motherhood for a little girl . . . the start of love-giving that will make her strive and fight for the security of those she loves as long as she lives.

Take care of your doll-baby, little girl. It is one of the world's most precious playthings.

The security that springs from love is the very heart of our living. It is a privilege known only in a country such as ours, where men and women are free to work for it.

And when we live up to the privilege of taking care of our own, we also best take care of our country. For the strength of America is in its secure homes all joined in a common security.

Saving for security is easy—on the Payroll Savings Plan for investing in United States Savings Bonds.

This is all you do. Go to your company's pay office, choose the amount you want to save—a couple of dollars a payday, or as much as you wish. That money will be set aside for you before you even draw your pay. And automatically invested in United States Series "E" Savings Bonds which are turned over to you.

If you can save only $3.75 a week on the Plan, in 9 years and 8 months you will have $2,137.30.

U.S. Series "E" Savings Bonds earn interest at an average of 3% per year, compounded semiannually, when held to maturity! And they can go on earning interest for as long as 19 years and 8 months if you wish.

If you want your interest as current income, ask your banker about 3% Series "H" Bonds which pay interest semiannually by Treasury check.

Beautiful Trivets Showing The GREAT SEAL OF THE CONFEDERACY

The Great Seal of the Confederate States of America was adopted by the Confederate Congress February 22, 1862. The meaning of the symbols is clear—an equestrian statue of George Washington surrounded with a wreath composed of the principal agricultural products of the Confederacy—cotton, tobacco, sugar cane, corn, wheat and rice. The Confederate States of America, 22 February, 1862, with the following motto "Deo Vindice" (God Favor Our Cause).

In developing this useful and attractive trivet Virginia Metalcrafters of Waynesboro, Virginia has surrounded the Great Seal with a Laurel Wreath of Valor brought together at the bottom with a Memorial Bow. They have also made attractive and appropriate use of Confederate flags, the Infantryman's rifle, Cavalryman's saber and the Artilleryman's cannon.

Are you using the space under your window?

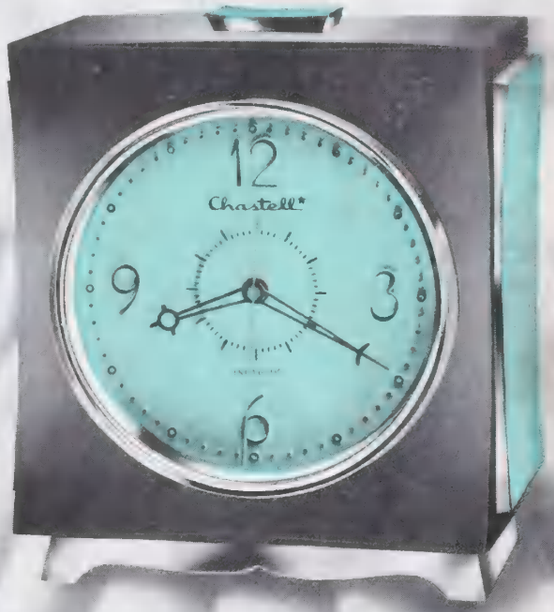
PHOTOGRAPH BY EZRA STOLLER

Here is a good example of how space can be utilized under a window—with three counter-high chests of drawers. Proportions of this "unit" are long and narrow, help it serve as architectural trim to the windows above. The right size can bring an appearance of custom-built neatness to the room. Home of the Arthur Stockstroms. Harris Armstrong, architect.

PHOTOGRAPH BY [illegible]



This window-high cabinet has sliding doors and file drawers for multiple use. Left corner is a capacious sewing counter (cabinets take care of all the equipment); right side shows small desk and bed headboard. Top of cabinets is tiled to make an easily cleaned sill for magazines, plants. Home of Gordon Lippincotts. Roy Johnson and J. Stein, architects.

When a room has no architectural interest

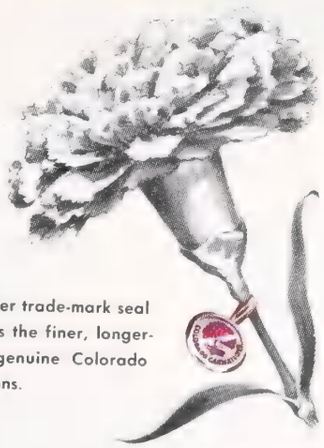
PHOTOGRAPH BY WILLIAM HOWLAND



This narrow hall with an undistinguished kitchen door loses its bare linear look by bringing in wallpaper with a dimensional effect. The camouflaging pattern of bold "draperies" covers the door completely, continues to end of passageway. Tapering pilaster at left side of door was cut from white wrapping paper, gives finish to design. Mrs. James Emmons, owner and designer.

PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER

Here, a stock paneled door seemed too small for its expanse of wall. So scale-making interest was painted on. Wide "molding" now surrounds frame; gaily-colored panels complete peasant motif. The good-humored ornamentation continues on the wall, with birds circling heating grille at left above. Thus new provincial character is given to an otherwise uninteresting hallway.

Flexsteel with Firestone Foamex* means GREATER COMFORT for the LONGEST TIME!

Aiouli*

By Sybille Bedford and Evelyn Gendel

Aiouli is the supreme chef d'oeuvre, the peerless unrivaled sovereign of garlic dishes. For garlic lovers, it is also one of the most enjoyable dishes in the world.*

Aiouli originated in Provence where they've eaten it for 2,000 years, and where every Friday everybody still smells madly of garlic—the very streets do too—but nobody minds.

Aiouli is, in its essentials, the simplest thing imaginable: a great hot platter of green vegetables, root vegetables, potatoes, hard-boiled eggs, and traditionally, salt codfish—all boiled to a turn, and arranged with all the pride and ingenuity of which the cook is capable. The raison d'être of this abundant and spectacular platter is the aiouli itself: a large, whipped bowlful of a homemade mayonnaise saturated with garlic. The aiouli is considered perfect when the first taste makes the eater feel as though he could blow fiery smoke like a dragon.

Ideally, it should be eaten at a slow, convivial luncheon in spring or autumn in the country. And afterwards, everyone in the party must stay in their own company, because no one else will bear them. The after-effect of an aiouli is invariably a sense of well-being, with everybody happy as grigs. In Provence they say it's because garlic has disinfectant properties for the digestive system. Whether or not this is true, the happy partakers at once start boasting of how much they ate, how well they feel, and then begin planning the next one.

GARLIC PRESS COURTESY OF BLOOMINGDALE'S NEW YORK

Aiouli used to be tricky to make, even for experts, but no longer. A splendid new gadget, exactly in principle and practise like a tiny potato ricer, takes one clove snugly at a time and reduces it to a fine pulp. As the whole secret of aiouli is in the smoothness of the garlic, this means that any novice can make it without fear. (We hope one day a statue will be erected to the inventor—a Public Spirited Man if there ever was one.)

Well then, all you need is a party of friends (four is really the minimum for the variety of foods required) and a notice on the door to garlic haters: Warning—Keep Out!

AIOULI

Essential Ingredients: oil, garlic, eggs, for the sauce: salt-cod fillets, hard-boiled eggs, potatoes, carrots, stringbeans—different kinds and colors.

Optional Ingredients: As many of the following as possible, and in this order: small beets, sweet potatoes, small zucchini, summer squash, onions, baby artichokes, cauliflower clusters, leeks.

The Sauce: Take one fat clove of garlic per person and one for the bowl. Peel them and put them through the garlic gadget. If you haven't the gadget, you'll need the patience to crush and pound and pound and crush, until you have a fine paste. In that case, start by crushing the whole cloves on a wooden spoon. Adding a few grains of coarse salt will help pulp it down more easily. (Don't try chopping the garlic: it's no help.)

Take one egg yolk for every two persons (lift out the gelatinous "eye" of the yolks), and add them to the garlic paste. Add also a spoonful of mustard, and stir well together until garlic, mustard and eggs make a smooth, homogeneous mass. Now take your oil (we prefer corn or peanut to olive oil for this) and turn it into a small pitcher with a good pouring lip. The point is to be able to pour easily and steadily without tiring, or having the nuisance of dripping. A folded kitchen towel under the bowl to keep it from slipping is a help too.

With a wooden spoon in one hand and the oil pitcher in the other, now, gradually at first, drop by drop, later in a thin, fine trickle, steadily stir in the oil. Stir steadily, regularly and always in the same direction. At the beginning, there will be just a thinnish egg-and-oil paste, then suddenly, the sauce will "take"—technically speaking, it will emulsify—and now the texture will be heavy and smooth: a recognizable mayonnaise.

Keep on stirring in oil in a steady, fine trickle. The aiouli will thicken until it reaches the proper, stiff, firm consistency. Don't worry about the exact quantity of oil: that is determined by the number of egg yolks. One egg normally absorbs at least six to eight ounces of oil, which makes more than enough aiouli for two. If you start with the right number of egg yolks for your people, they will automatically make you the right amount of sauce. All you have to do is to stop adding oil as soon as you have a generous amount of an aiouli which seems as stiff and thick as it will get.

You don't want to taste garlic ahead of time—so don't taste the aiouli in the making. In any case, it needs no seasoning: even the

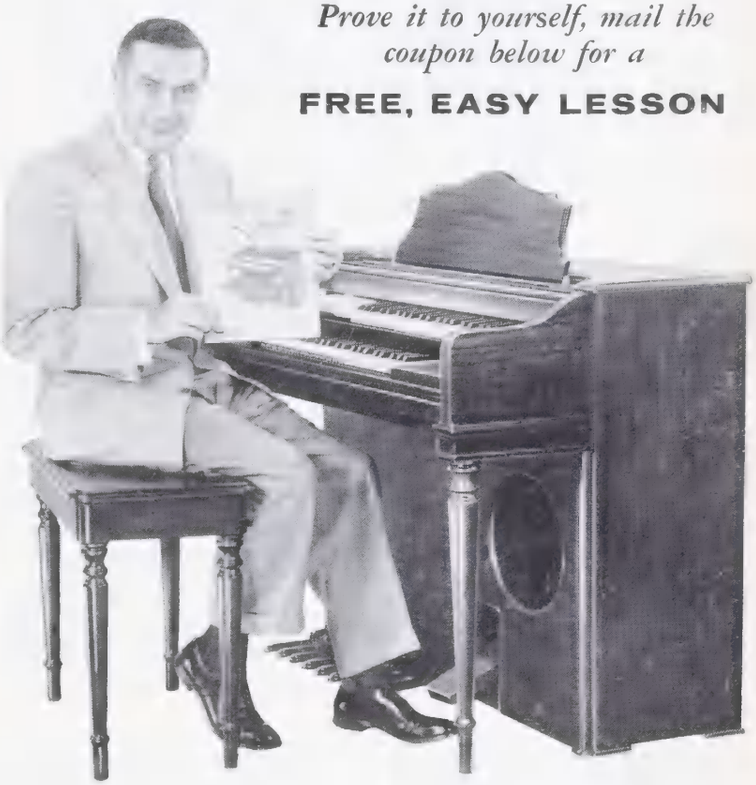
Common Garden Fallacies

People say: Worms make a garden soil better.



The truth: If the soil is rich, worms will be plentiful. If the soil is poor, worms won't survive, even if you add them.

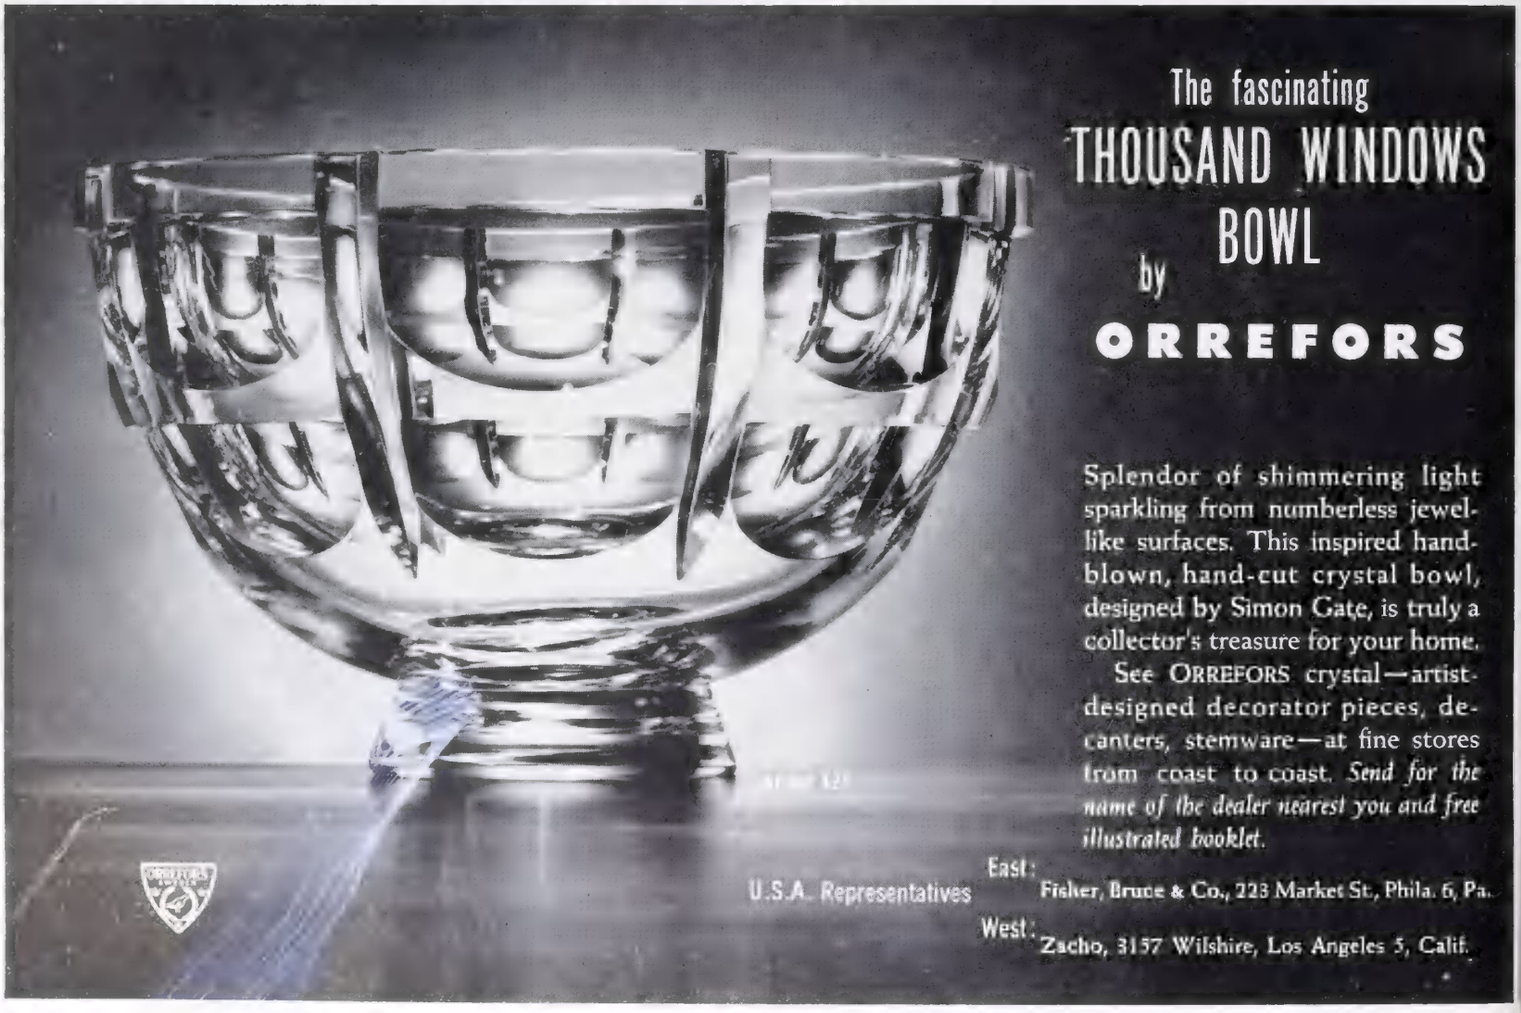
few grains of salt, which you may have crushed in with the garlic at the beginning, is optional. If the finished aiouli stands covered in a cool place (not on ice) for a couple of hours before serving, that's all to the good. It can be eaten at once equally well.

Note about curdling: Any mayonnaise, let alone an aiouli, will occasionally go wrong, i.e., the smooth emulsion will separate into its original egg-and-oil components.

To avoid this, always:



1. Start slowly, slowly with the oil, drop by drop, to give the yolks time to begin assimilating it.
2. Have oil and eggs at room temperature, not iced.
3. Don't go on and on after you have a good quantity; too much oil will separate.

If the aiouli shows signs of going wrong, throw in an ice cube and stir vigorously. Take out the ice the instant it looks normal again. This usually works, although the ice thins the sauce a bit. If the aiouli separates anyhow, you can still save it. Put an egg yolk and a teaspoonful of mustard into a fresh bowl and stir it smooth. Then gradually start stirring in drops of oil, and as soon as this new sauce "takes," begin adding the curdled aiouli—little by little, in half-teaspoonfuls. As you stir, it should re-take perfectly into a good, properly emulsified sauce.

An electric blender does the job swiftly and surely—in seconds. And if you want to try aiouli without any work whatsoever, this too, is possible. For each person, crush one clove garlic with a press, add one tablespoon warm water, mix thoroughly and stir into one-half cup of Hellmans or Best Foods mayonnaise. If you like, you may color this hearty aiouli with a single drop of green vegetable coloring.

The Vegetables

Group your vegetables together by cooking times, and do all those taking the same time together in the same pot. However, if you're crowded for space, boil all the vegetables, the potatoes and the eggs (but not the beets because of their color) in the same large saucepan of briskly boiling salted water, beginning with those that take longest to cook. Work out a timetable beforehand, and put it down on paper.

All the same, test them as they cook: All vegetables must be tender but still quite firm, and on no account overcooked. In spite of your calculations, one kind may be done before another. If so, remove at once with a straining ladle, drain and keep hot.

Beets (which are excellent with aiouli) are done separately, otherwise their color will stain all the others red. Heat some canned small whole beets, then drain and peel them.

For the salt-cod: Get the filleted kind and follow the directions on the box. As an alternative to cod (which is traditional), we particularly like a good brand of firm canned tuna fish, which tastes very good with aiouli. It also involves no work, because it is served and eaten as is, cold, though not chilled.

Serving the Aiouli

A well-served aiouli is a pleasure to behold. For a really beautiful platter, the vegetables must first of all be well-drained and quite dry. Everything hot, of course, and the platter hot to receive them. Arrange the vegetables as your fancy and taste dictate: Alternate green with colored, not necessarily one heap of each, but in a number of smaller clumps, and punctuate with eggs, beets and potatoes.

We like best a large round or oval platter. Whatever you use, the only rule is to arrange everything as handsomely as possible.

The tuna or codfish on a separate dish, and the aiouli in its bowl (on a saucer, with a serving spoon beside it). Nothing else on the table except bread and a good deal of robust red wine to drink with it—a rough but honest (possibly gallon-bottled) wine, say a California Barbera or Chianti, lightly cooled.

And all the time in the world to eat. Each person takes a sampling of everything, then a large spoonful of the aiouli, and falls to, then returns again and again to the platter to try different combinations, while the aiouli bowl circulates as needed.

Afterwards, traditionally, only cool fresh figs and goat cheese (other desserts taste insipid). Try Parmesan or Cacciavallo, and dried figs or grapes. And more wine. If, in the end, everyone has eaten and drunk prodigiously, that's only as it should be.

More than a million people must be right when they choose their gift toys from the

One wonderful curtain

A wonderful curtain, without benefit of over-draperies, is sometimes all you need to give a room a beautiful and fragile elegance

Give your windows glamour and impact by hanging one wonderful curtain under a simple valance. Arabesques of this nostalgic curtain, from the fabulous Ottavia collection, are appliqués embroidered on finest bobbinet (see inset). Edges are re-inforced with double scallops. Unheaded curtain, size 63" by 96", is uniformly priced everywhere at $85; 66" x 112" at $100.

BOTH SETTINGS PHOTOGRAPHED AT LORD & TAYLOR BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

Here is another example of the importance that just one exquisite curtain, under a casual taffeta valance, can give a window. Eliminating both cost and distraction of over-draperies, the focus of interest is on the beautiful tracery of oak leaves embroidered in vertical stripes. Notice how curtain is given extra strength by its hemmed edges tailored to withstand many washings. Top is left unheaded for your choice of treatment. This curtain, 42" by 100", is another in the group of Ottavia Swiss imports, costing $29.50, a modest enough price for such sheer allurement. From Lord & Taylor.

With a fine flair for fitting smartly into the contemporary scene, Stegor by Gorham is beautifully simple, functionally designed silverplate. It introduces great versatility of use in plated flatware . . . for example, the place size knife, fork and spoon fit both luncheon and dinner settings. Stegor's XP-125 plating means that it is plated with substantially more pure silver than the accepted standard for the finest silverplated flatware—not just at a few of the points of greatest wear, but over the entire piece, including edges of bowls and tips of tines. Dent-resistant, rattle-proof one-piece knife handles cannot come apart or develop unsightly seams. HOW TO LEAVE HOME and like it

By LOUISA M. COMSTOCK

Caracas, Venezuela's gem-like, mountain-set capital, figures in so many Caribbean cruise schedules this year that you really ought to be prepared for what to expect there. Far from being "just another cruise stop," it's a handsome, modern city with a fairly glittering social life and a sophistication that most North Americans, for some odd reason, are usually surprised to find in a South American city. In fact, Caracas might well be your vacation goal if glamour is what you're after, and it makes admirable headquarters for further sidetripping.

From the port of La Guaira or the airport, you approach it over a spectacular mountain highway—sixty million dollars worth of engineering, 23 miles long, 3,000 feet high, with automatic controls for traffic and ventilation in its tunnels. It's a drive you never forget.

Caracas still retains plenty of its 16th-century Spanish flavor and is faithfully aware of its liberator-hero, Simon Bolivar. But you'll probably be more impressed by the modernity of the place, rich reflections of the iron and oil profits that have been made here. A new eight-lane, skyscraper-lined boulevard spans the city. The huge new Hotel Tamanaco has a glassed-in night club, a king-size swimming pool, a chic Dior shop, and presidential suites with solid-gold fixtures—as well as rooms, at $8 a day. The latest pride of Caracas, the Centro Bolivar, has recently been opened (cost: three times that of Rockefeller Center), with twin office-building towers 28 stories high, its foundations four levels down and parking space for 600 buses and 1,600 cars. And the lovely residential districts are something you should visit with your notebook in hand, ready to jot down ideas for your own home. (Please turn to page 239)

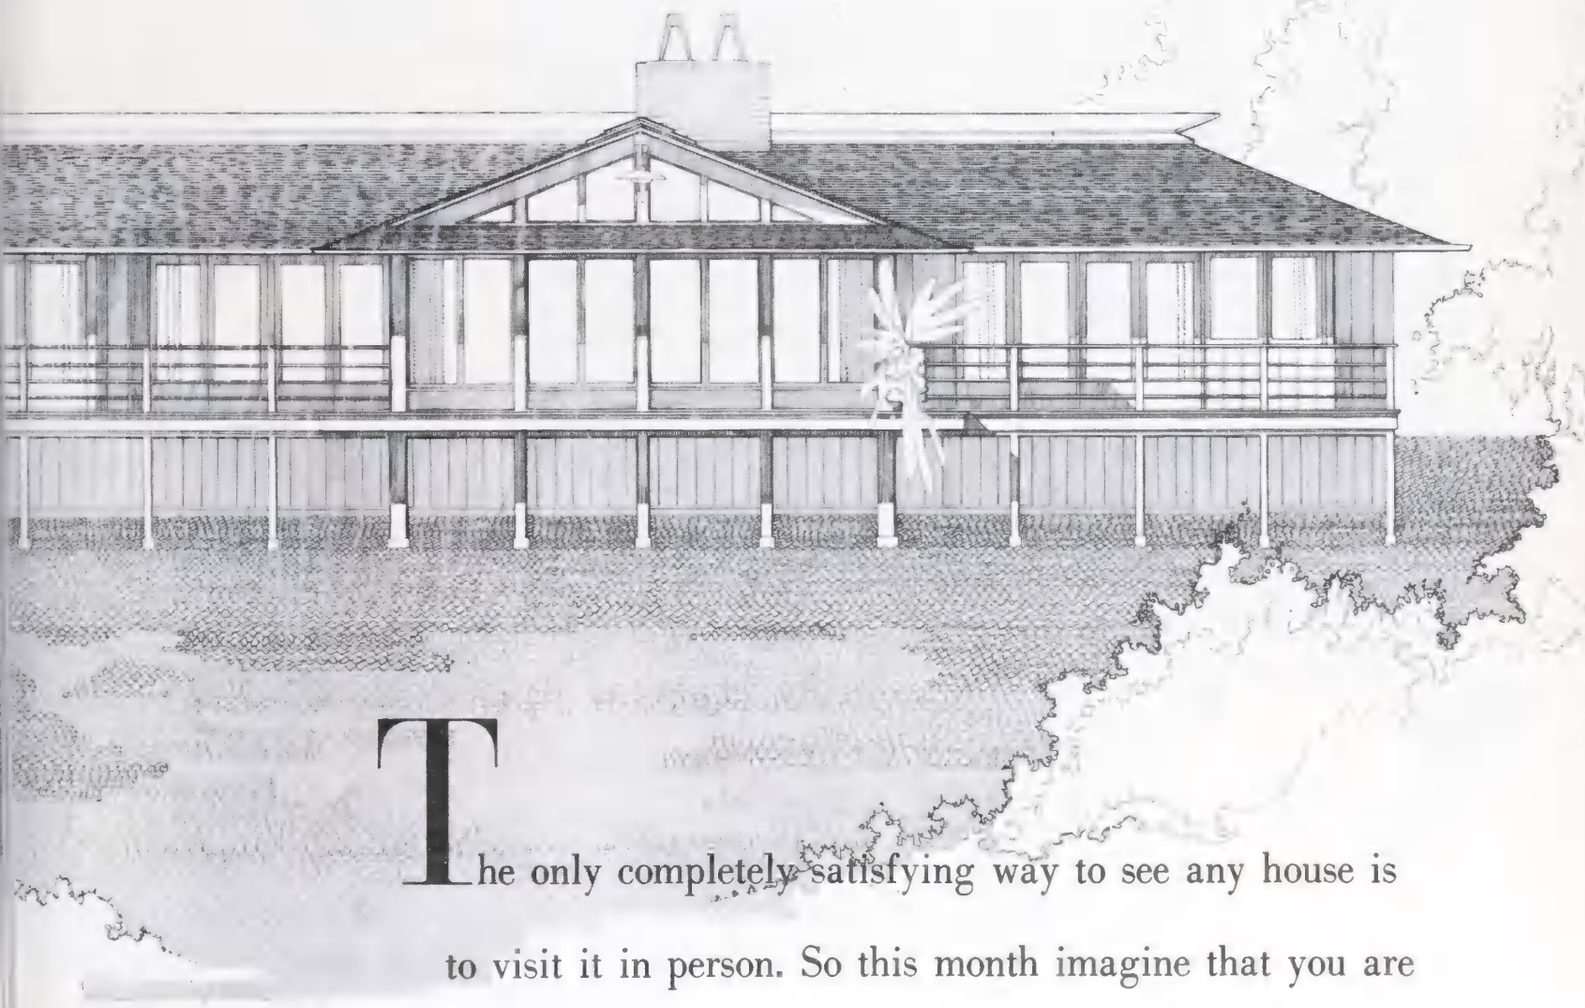
A man with ideas about STEEL

Dreaming in a deep chair, puffing his pipe—a carefree, comfortable fellow, indeed. He made his winter comfort plans in advance—with steel.

He foiled winter winds with low-cost, non-warping steel storm doors and windows. He has no worries about damage to strong, corrosion-resistant steel downspouts and gutters.

His house is warm inside, thanks to a steel furnace and steel heat ducts. And the job of cleaning snowy sidewalks and driveway is made much easier by a steel snow shovel or a motor-driven plow.



He's fixed up for many winters to come, too, because products of steel are built to last!

Steel puts living like this within anyone's reach. With all its desirable virtues, steel is modest in price. Let steel—the foundation of modern living—work for you. It's America's great bargain metal.

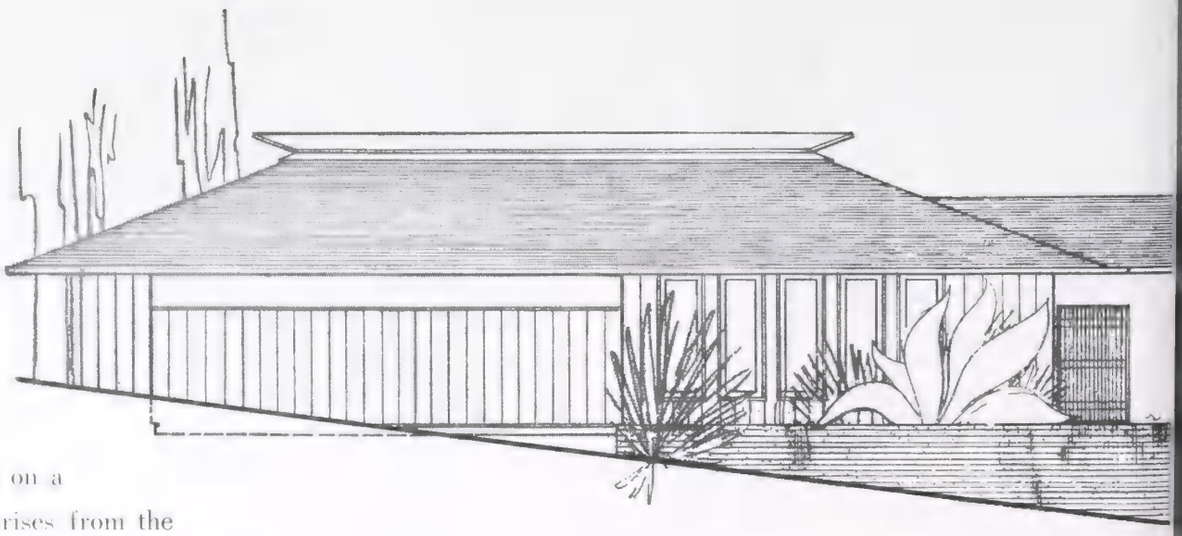
The only completely satisfying way to see any house is to visit it in person. So this month imagine that you are a visitor, walking with our photographer through one family's well-designed home. Step by step, let the house explain itself and what it means to the happy people who live here. →

Come with us for

A walk through a Good

This is a good house because—

- It does exactly what it was designed to do. It provides a family of two adults and four children between the ages of four and eleven with a home that not only fits perfectly their physical requirements and daily living habits but responds as fully to their emotional needs



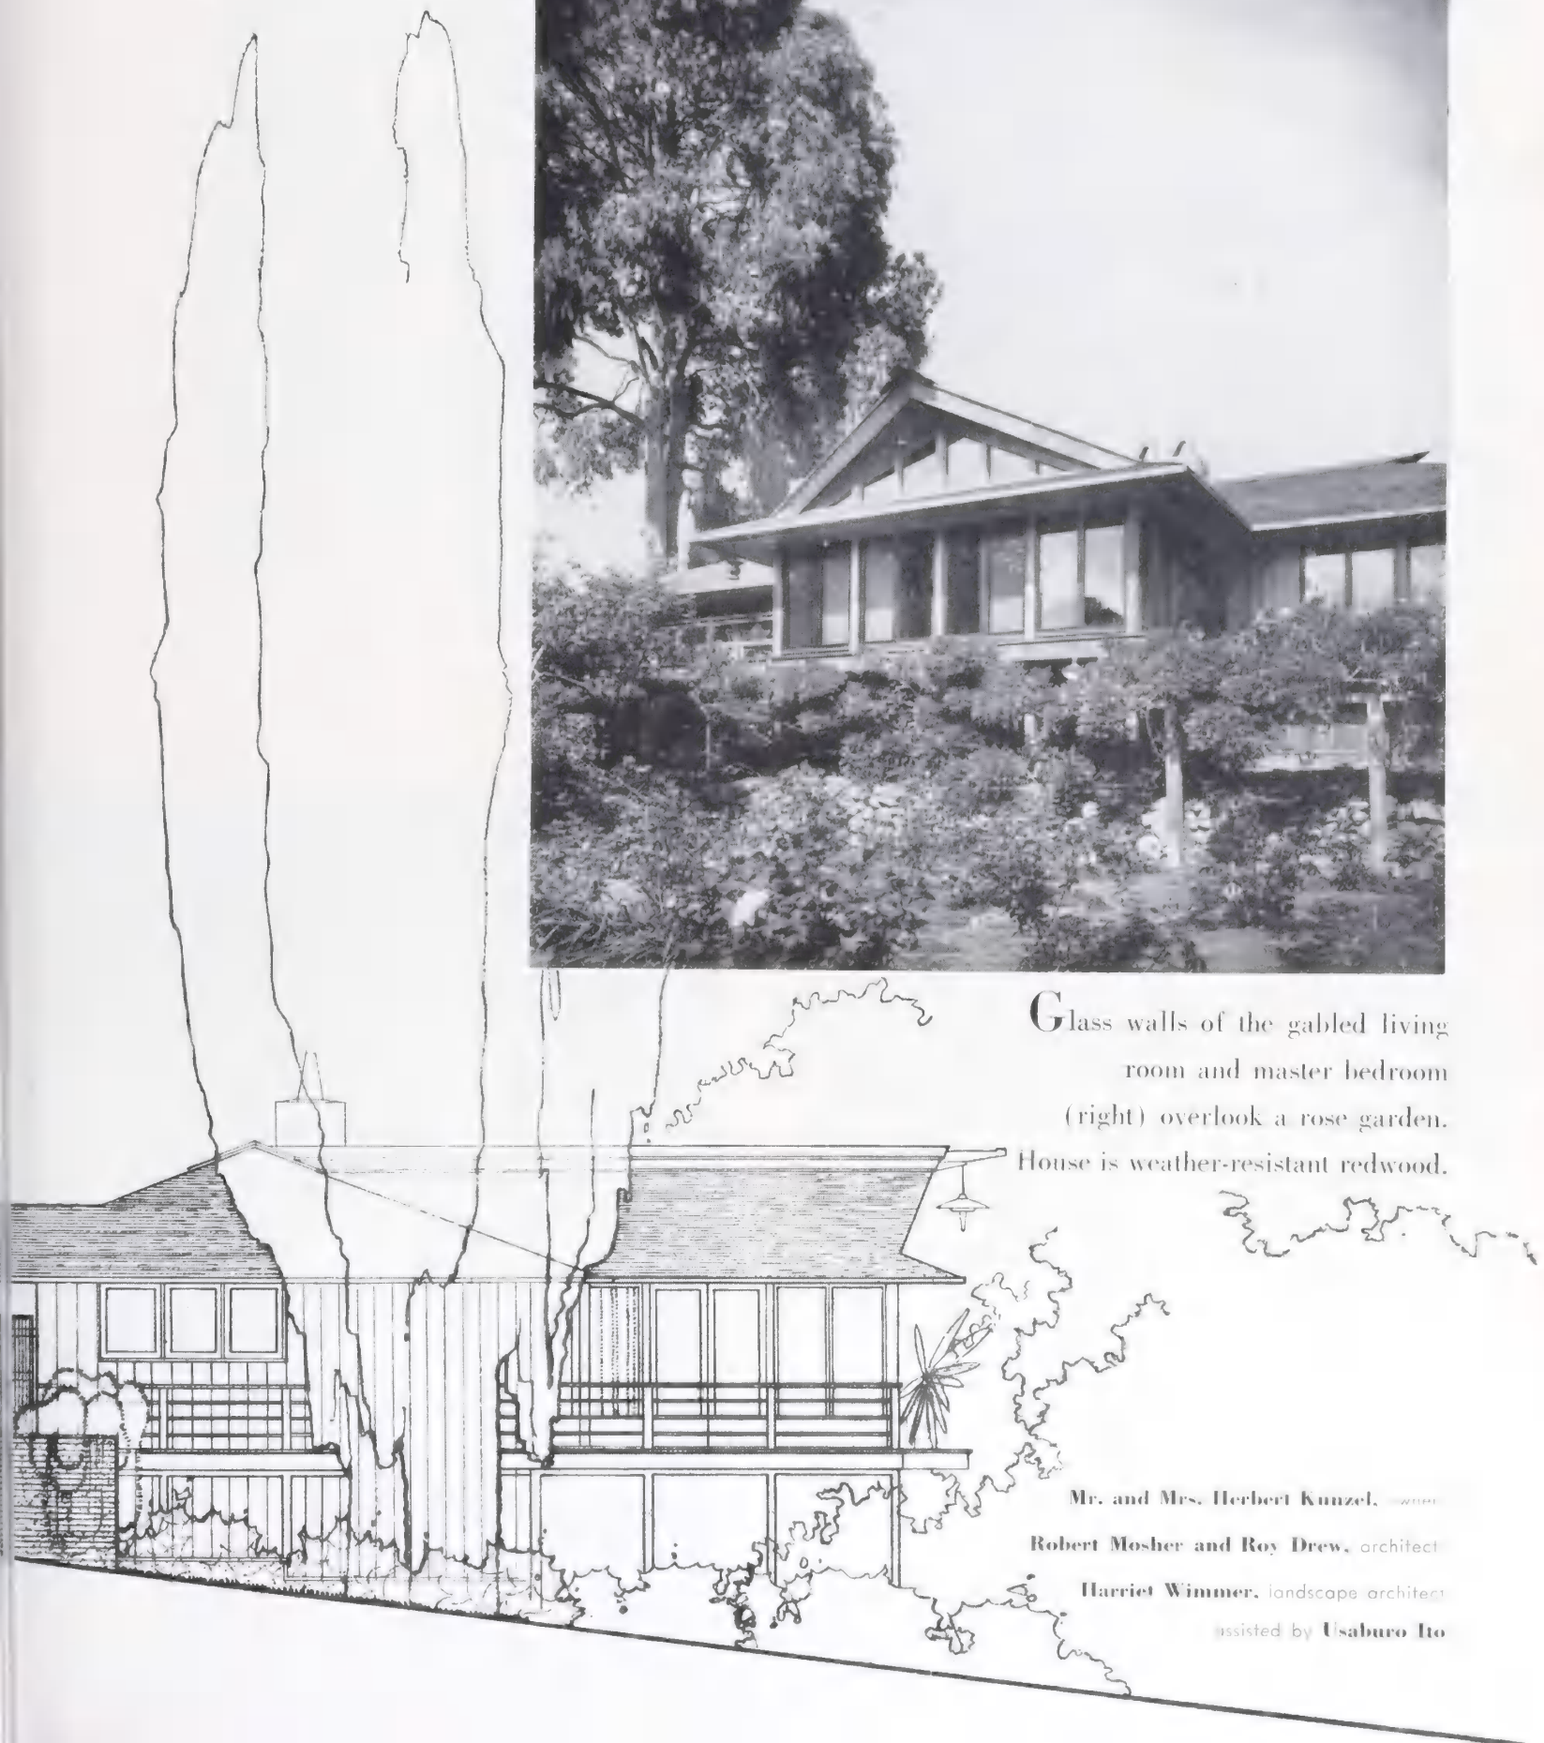
- It makes no pretenses. It avoids "Style," allowing fine, simple materials, clean carpentry and natural finishes to be enjoyed for what they are.

- In form and plan it adapts itself to its sloping site (once the garden of a large estate) and to its views of wooded landscape and nearby San Diego Bay.

- Its plan is logical and uncomplicated.

- Inside and outside, its materials are easy to maintain.

- It recognizes that in today's hectic world home can be a wonderful retreat in which adults may find renewal and where children may be helped to grow with dignity and individual purpose.



The house, built on a slope, gradually rises from the ground until eventually it seems to be suspended among the trees.

Your first view from street level

You look down on a pattern of sheltering roofs and feel immediately the sense of protection which is strong throughout this house. A glimpse of the children's play yard shows you how far from the roadway and how safe it is.

The floor plan shows you why this is a happy house for the whole family. The children's needs for fun, noise and freedom are provided for in their own bedroom-playroom area from which they can run out to a fine open play yard. A fence and plants screen the sunny yard from the entrance terrace. Adult rooms are placed where they can enjoy seclusion and serenity, but are close enough so that children still feel very much a part of things. Note that kitchen is a family room.

You park your car

From the car shelter you turn right, passing the little house that accommodates the maid, walking along a lovely path that will lead you to the entrance terrace. House was planned around the giant old eucalyptus and its protecting shade.

Maid's room ↑

Entrance walk starts with dramatic planting

There's no clutter of plants anywhere, as this first look at the planting shows so well. Each plant has been chosen and placed because it adds its bit to the beauty of its neighbors and the house. Nor are the stones and pebbles just any old collection. They were selected at the beach as a family project.

At the end of the pebble path, you reach the eucalyptus tree. Looking under the roof which joins the maid's house and carport to the kitchen of the main house (right), you see the shaded terrace.

The entrance, sheltered, attractive, inviting...

The seclusion of the house, its sense of sheltered privacy, unfolds step by step as you walk down its sunny garden path and through the light-dappled terrace until you reach the calm climax of its shaded entrance door. At night it is suffused with the soft, welcoming glow of lantern light.

Entrance, seen from inside the living room

Once inside the house, you see the long entrance terrace as an intimate garden. You notice that the fireplace wall screens the living room from the entrance doors, protects its privacy.

When you turn from the view you see this

A quiet conversation center with its back to two protecting walls, a snug contrast to the openness of the rest of the room. Screen gives a sense of enclosure. Books and heirloom Cantonware add their warmth to waxed redwood walls and tawny cork floor. End cabinet stores records.

Dining room

Dining area, at your right as you enter the living room, opens on a broad deck where meals are often served. Deck is continuous outside all rooms on the high end of the house.

Storage partition makes entry to kitchen

In the dining area you see a mahogany cabinet so placed that it creates a little hallway to the kitchen, screening kitchen sounds and views. It was designed with shallow shelves for china, silver and linens and can be opened from both sides. Its top is lighted so that it casts a soft glow into the room and the passage on the other side.

Deck, outside of kitchen

The family-room part of kitchen opens out, like dining area, on broadest part of deck which runs half-way around house. Children love to eat out here, 12 feet above ground. (House rule bars climbing the rail.) You see now the reason for the counter unit on wheels shown above. It's kept permanently loaded with table-setting necessities, easily trundled out of kitchen to deck.

Now you are in the family room, where most meals are eaten at the large cherry table. See how easy it is to serve yourself literally "off the stove" because cooking units are built into the mahogany kitchen counter, which acts as a buffet, surfaced in grease-resistant, red-brown clay quarry tile. Cooking utensils are bright copper and colorful earthenware, pretty to see.

Kitchen storage and family room

A step away from the kitchen counter, built-in cupboards store foods and china on shallow curved shelves that make them easy to get at. Paraphernalia for family-room fun and games go in closet next to fireplace.

You're now in the heart of the house, for while adults and youngsters can always pursue their ways in their own made-to-order areas, this is where all hands congregate as a family to broil steaks in the fireplace, to eat, to study, to play together. It has the friendly warmth of a farmhouse kitchen and confirms what we say on page 220, that the American dining room is changing.

The parents' bedroom, restful and relaxed, has the sheltered remoteness of a tree house, with no distraction other than a view of the bay and the rustle of leaves. Designed for a pair who read prodigiously, it's a peaceful library, day and night.

Beds, covered in a patterned, glazed cotton that won't show soil or wrinkles, have movable arm-rests so are usable as chaises longues. Drop leaves from wall open to hold snacks, phone. Radio is built in.

Outside the bedroom the deck becomes a plant ledge. Looking across it to the living room's glass-enclosed prow, you get a sense of the bedroom's seclusion from rest of house, although it is not actually remote.

You can see the view even from the beds. While parents enjoy this placid privacy, they are right next to children's rooms, but their dressing room insulates them from noise.

The Most Accommodating Room in the House

By ELLEN SHERIDAN

Everywhere people are packing new performance into the dining room, multiplying its usefulness by 200 or 300 per cent. Here are 11 examples that show how the dining room is changing

In case you have been misled by rumors that the dining room is a thing of the past, let us assure you that the dining room has never been livelier. In our editorial travels across the country, we see quite clearly that people still want—and have—a room which is primarily planned for the graceful, civilized service of meals. But we also observe that the nature of the dining room is changing. It is becoming a multiple-purpose room, no longer designed solely for use during a couple of mealtime hours a day. As houses have become smaller and servantless, and as more and more activities are being centered in the home, few people can afford to set aside one whole room for one single purpose. Accordingly, the new dining room may take on as many different functions as a family's needs require. It may be music room, TV room, library, sewing room, family playroom, cooking room—but see for yourself its endless aspects on these ten pages.

A music-TV-reading-dining room

PHOTOGRAPHED AT A. I. D., "AT HOME IN AMERICA 1954"

This is a room for reading, for music-making and TV-viewing. And at mealtime it becomes as mannerly a dining room as any traditional one. The comfortable sofa and low tables facing the television screen acknowledge realistically that this is how many people actually dine these days. The room is typical of the way our changing habits are changing our ideas of what a dining room should be.

Our changing dining rooms may be furnished with anything from books to wine bottles. The table may be centered or placed against a wall. It may not be one table, but several small ones. Or it may not appear until mealtime, already set and rolled in from the kitchen. Chairs may be stools, cushions, benches.

Why this new look? Because people are living as they want to, freely and sensibly, casually or formally, but always in tune with their own times instead of by another era's stilted formulas. And notice that even in the most casual of these rooms dining is never a makeshift, second-thought function. No matter what other activities they share, provision for graceful, beautiful meals is always primary. The amenities of mealtime, the pleasant, orderly sharing of food with family and friends, are still as respected as they have ever been.

One of the most significant changes in the dining room shows up even in rooms that are dedicated solely to the business of eating. This is the unexpected but entirely acceptable appearance of devices that might once have been found only in the kitchen. For instance, serving tables and carts that are electrically wired to keep food warm or to actually cook it. And you could add to these a host of portable appliances like toasters, coffee makers, skillets, even little bake-ovens for "heat-and-serve" breads—all good to look at and so simple and clean in operation that cooking in the dining room is as graceful a performance as afternoon tea. As further proof of this new interest in cooking and eating in one place, the newest dining rooms—sometimes the tables themselves—are generously equipped with electrical outlets.

Yes, the dining room is changing, as people become their own cooks and serving maids, aided by the clean, convenient wonders of electronic equipment. We think this foreshadows a change in the kitchen, too, now that its cook-stove functions can be carried on in practically any room in the house.

This elegant dining room shares honors with the kitchen

By all current standards the Harris dining room is formal, yet even here provision is made for self-service and dining-room cookery. A dining room that can do the cooking

Just as clean, easy-working electrical appliances have made cooking at the table a perfectly feasible part of dining, our back-yard barbecue experiences have given us the urge to grill, broil and smoke foods right in the house. It's a utility, sheltered by a kitchen counter above it, but it's also beautiful furniture, worthy of any room, typical of the sensible elegance that our casual living is acquiring. Secrets of French

Here are excerpts from THE ALICE B. TOKLAS COOKBOOK

A word with the cook

As cook to cook. I must confide that this book with its mingling of recipe and reminiscence was put together during the first three months of an attack of pernicious jaundice. Partly, I suppose, it was written as an escape from the narrow diet and monotony of illness, and I dare say nostalgia for old days and old ways and for remembered health and enjoyment that lent special lustre to dishes and menus barred from an invalid table, but hovering dream-like in invalid memory.

Illness sets the mind free sometimes to roam and surmise. Though born in America, I have lived so long in France that both countries seem to be mine and knowing, loving both. I took to pondering on the differences in eating habits and general attitude to food and the kitchen in the United States and here.

Then I fell to considering how every nation, for the matter of that, has its idiosyncrasies in food and drink conditioned by climate, soil and temperament. And I thought about wars and conquests and how invading or occupying troops carry their habits with them and so, in time, perhaps modify the national kitchen or table.

The French approach to food is characteristic: they bring to their consideration of the table the same appreciation, respect, intelligence and lively interest that they have for the other arts—for painting, for literature and for the theatre. By French I mean French men as well as French women, for the men in France play a very active part in everything that pertains to the kitchen. I have heard working men in Paris discuss the way their wives prepare a beef stew as it is cooked in Burgundy or the way a cabbage is cooked with salt pork and browned in the oven. A woman in the country can be known for kilometres about for the manner in which she prepares those sublimated dumplings known as quenelles, and a very complicated dish they are. Conversation even in a literary or political salon can turn to the subject of menus, food or wine.

The French like to say that their food stems from their culture and that it has developed over the centuries. It has its universal reputation for these reasons and on account of the mild climate and fertile soil.

We foreigners living in France respect and appreciate this point of view, but deplore their too strict observance of a tradition to be published by Harper & Bros. in November which will not admit the slightest deviation in a seasoning or the suppression of a single ingredient. For example, a dish as simple as a potato salad must be served surrounded by chicory. To serve it with any other green is inconceivable. Still this strict conservative attitude over the years has resulted in a number of essential principles that have made the renown of the French kitchen.

French markets without facilities for freezing food are limited to seasonal produce which is, however, of excellent quality with the exception of beef, milk and a few fruits. Even the common root vegetables—carrots, turnips, parsnips and leeks (the asparagus of the poor), are tender and savoury. Olive oil and butter are abundant and of a high grade, and bread is nourishing and delicious.

The French are indifferent to these new discoveries of ours, to the exact science that American cooking has become, to our time- and labour-saving devices. Nor do they like the food that issues from our modern kitchens. They say that it is either too imaginative or too exotic. One may say of the French what was said of their Bourbon kings: They learn nothing, they forget nothing. Since the war we Americans have learned a great deal from the various sources and, as teaching is natural to us, we would like to share our knowledge.

French cooking for the use of American or British women is not hedged around with as many difficulties as most of them suppose. If they permit themselves to indulge in national prejudices, they should admit the same privilege for the French. For example the French use butter, and of an excellent quality, for nearly all their cooking, not only because it gives a flavour that no substitute does, but because it "marries" as they say, that is it amalgamates all the flavours of the dish as well as thickens the sauce.

Which brings us at once to a fundamental difference between French and American cooking. The famous five basic sauces do not prevent French cooking from being dry, whilst American cooking is moist though devoid of sauces. The French drink wine with their lunch as well as with their dinner. Americans drink little wine, if any, with their meals; but there are at least a dozen beverages from which they can choose an accompaniment to their food if they want to. Four of the five basic French sauces are certainly unknown even by name to half the population of France. Almost any Frenchwoman can prepare a white sauce, frequently and erroneously called by Americans a cream sauce. The French being realistic look facts in the face and only call a sauce a cream sauce when it is made with cream. Some French sauces have a small amount of cream in them but that does not make them a cream sauce. The French never add tabasco, ketchup or Worcestershire sauce, nor do they eat any of the innumerable kinds of pickles, nor do they accompany a meat course with radishes, olives or salted nuts. Respect for the inherent quality and flavour of each ingredient is typical of the French attitude to food, and it gives a delicacy and poignancy to their cooking. Their discreet use of herbs is to be remarked. This restraint, le juste milieu they call it, the golden mean, is what makes them not only good cooks but good critics of food.

French cooking is founded upon the discoveries made in the Seventeenth Century when suddenly everyone who could afford it became interested in food as a fine art. It was a century of advancement in the art of living and the art of cooking was greatly refined and widened. Expressing its time as any original (Please turn to page 330)

How Modern Architecture is Returning to the Middle West

Modern, organic architecture, born in the Middle West, is returning—this time to stay. The house shown on these pages is proof of its vigorous maturity.

Not long after organic architecture first appeared on the prairies of the Middle West, it suffered the Genteel Reaction that followed the wake of the Chicago World's Fair of 1893 and covered the country with pseudo-classic railway stations, libraries, town halls and elephantine mansions.

Now, on the whole, the most significant architectural battle has been won, at least since World War II, which seemed to have swept the air clean for a new building effort, closer to the needs and techniques of our time. Few architects of standing today design in the style of ancient Roman Baths or Spanish castles. In this sense modern architecture has won.

But modern, organic architecture—architecture that is designed for particular people with understanding for their special needs, the nature of the site and the materials to be used—still has the problem of steering a sensible path between two versions of modern, both of them troubling.

The first troubling version of modern might be called, in Lewis Mumford's recent words, "the Ice Queen's palace of sterile formalism to which the brilliant Mies van de Rohe [currently in Chicago] has led himself and his disciples." It is the all-glass cube with stripped-down interiors.

The second version is more "modernistic" than modern. It borrows various modernistic devices (Please turn the page)

This is a house that has caused visitors to exclaim, "I don't like modern architecture, but this is lovely!" It has warmth and charm and is without clichés.

You enter through a stone wall and descend these stairs to the living room. The garden on the left is the first in a gradually unfolding series of surprises.

When modern architecture is beautifully done, it sets a standard for all the architecture of a community. Many people, previously opposed, now see an unexpected charm in its open relationship to a fine garden, the use of natural materials and the sensible planning such as picture windows without any pictures in them, flat roofs when a pitched roof may be needed, sharp contrast of materials for shock value and novelty's sake, and so on. This "modernistic" architecture is imitative and full of the clichés of the moment.

Some communities are bothered by one version of modern architecture; others by another. Too many have seen nothing but examples of both kinds: cold, box-like houses on one hand, and a sort of peanut-brittle modern on the other. One can hardly blame the local residents in such communities for turning completely away from all modern architecture, since what they have before them is clearly not what they want as models for their own building and furnishing.

For this reason, it is vital that the first modern houses in a community be good ones. If they start out badly, then modern or, if you prefer, contemporary architecture will go badly in imitation, or people will be repelled by even the notion of modern architecture for years to come. If, however, a truly distinguished modern house is built by people of culture and influence, then fine contemporary architecture has an excellent chance of developing further and better throughout the area.

The home you are looking at performs this latter role, as well as demonstrates that modern. (Please turn the page)

Between living room and deck is this porch, which is screened on three sides and can be closed off completely from the living room in winter. The glass in the center allows a view unimpeded by the screening.

After entering through the stone wall and descending the stairs to the living room, after experiencing a succession of dramatic surprises, this wonderful view of the distant Meramec River bursts upon you and you realize what a fine modern house can offer.

Here you are looking past the great curving path leading to the deck, toward the south wing with its two bedrooms.

organic architecture is here to stay. The owners are Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Stockstrom. Their home is outside St. Louis, Missouri. Their architect was Harris Armstrong, who was also the architect for the very modern and successful administration building of Magic Chef, Inc., of which Mr. Stockstrom is president. This was largely responsible for the decision to tear down their old house and build a new, modern one in its place, a decision that somewhat shocked their conservative friends.

Not knowing exactly what would happen, their friends might be considered justified, since most (not all) of the modern residential architecture in the environs of St. Louis, it must be admitted, can be classed as undistinguished and "modernistic."

When the new home was finished and furnished, then, you can imagine what the friends of the Stockstroms anticipated. Let Mrs. Stockstrom tell the story of two of them who saw it for the first time:

"You knew she had warned her husband to just look and keep his thoughts about the house to himself," Mrs. Stockstrom relates. "You could tell it by the expression on their faces. When they came through the stone wall into the house, they were a little troubled. They hadn't expected the warmth of the furnishings or the charm of the architecture. Then when they saw the river view and the way the house opened to take advantage of it, they each exclaimed, 'Why, I love this! I really do!' "

Many, many people since have remarked, "I don't like modern architecture, but this is lovely." They had always conceived modern to be something cheap and flashy. In the Stockstrom home they are impressed by the comfort, the wide overhangs that protect and shade the large expanses of glass, the choice of non-"modern" furniture, the splendor (Please turn the page)

This is the entrance to the Stockstrom house. On entering for the first time, you have no idea of what's ahead.

DRAWING BY HELEN SCHIAVO

Landscape, wall and house form an integrated, functional and esthetically satisfying unity. The curves of the buff limestone wall and of the paths and entrance court contrast effectively with the straight lines and planes of the house. Only in a view like this can you see it at a glance. On the ground its effectiveness slowly dawns on you as you walk around.

of the views. There has been a steady stream of visitors, most of whom plan to build a new home themselves. It is remarkable how often their attitude has been changed by their vision of what a really good modern house can offer.

It is not difficult to see why they are so taken by their visit. You approach the Stockstrom home along a beautiful curving limestone wall that leads you to the entrance. The house is completely hidden behind the wall and the entrance looks like a gate to the garden within. Then, as you enter, the house begins to reveal itself. You do have a garden on your left, viewed through glass, as you descend the few steps to the living room. This is the first pleasant surprise.

There is a succession of dramatic and pleasant surprises until, well in the house, the extraordinary view of the Meramec River, framed in a wall of protected glass, overwhelms you with its beauty. You walk out on the porch and onto the deck-terrace where you can look back and see the whole house for the first time. Only then might you call it a modern house, but by then your prejudices have disappeared.

Architect Harris Armstrong gives much of the credit for the quality of this house to Mr. Stockstrom. "It's the intimate knowledge of what he wanted, of the limitations and potentials of the site, that helped most. He grew up here in the old house and knew his land well. He was a good client, who is an exacting client, incidentally. (Please turn to page 297)

This utility room, above and opposite, is located adjacent to the kitchen. Along this wall are visible a freezer, laundry equipment, cabinets and an edge of the sink.

Here is the extremely well-equipped workshop of Mr. Stockstrom, owner of the house. It is big enough to handle large lengths of lumber. It has strip-oak wood flooring to protect tools accidentally dropped.

In this north-lighted studio (see plan on previous page) owner made desk, shelves and movable painting stand.

This is the flower-arranging side of the utility room, complete with stainless steel sink and counter, and storage cabinets containing vases and necessary cutting tools.

The kitchen is neatly equipped with a "Magic Chef" range, counter space, sink, a dishwasher, refrigerator, storage space, and copper ventilating hood. Louvers outside window give light and privacy.

Pots and pans are hung in the kitchen by means of adjustable hooks inserted into perforated acoustical building board. Counter is heavy laminated wood, like a butcher block.

A fine house means quality not quantity

We no longer judge a home of luxury by the number of rooms or floors it has. Today we judge it by beauty of design, function and suitability

For many years it has been an American characteristic to judge excellence in terms of size. The tallest skyscraper, the longest car, the largest drugstore became ipso facto the best. As a result, when people of means built, they built big, manorial (and inefficient) mansions.

Lately, however, a change from quantity to quality has been developing in this country. A shrinking supply of domestic help, the exponential rise in tax rates and the increased costs of construction labor have all combined to hasten the end of such enormous "white elephants."

Today, the quality of a great house is measured not by the number of rooms or the amount of square feet but by the more esthetic and practical standards: beauty, design, livability, richness of materials, landscaping and the basic quadrangular relationship of people, furnishings, architecture and site.

The trend is toward smaller, more easily kept houses, so skillfully planned and so tastefully furnished that they supply the same luxury-living once reserved for the owners of enormous mansions.

One such home belongs to Mr. and Mrs. Mervyn LeRoy, of Bel Air, California.

When the LeRoys engaged architect Samuel Marx to design their home, Mrs. LeRoy summed up her family's housing desires by saying, "What we want is an apartment set in a garden—the convenience of one, the beauty of the other."

Admittedly this is anomalous, but (Please turn the page)

Front entrance of house seen from across the ample motor court. Fifteen cars can park here at once, without spoiling the mobility of any. Air of house is unpretentious and modest even though, inside, it is luxurious.

Garden side of the house is completely unlike entrance façade: open, glassy, equipped inside and outside as a continuous living whole. The swimming pool is designed to be also a pleasing landscape feature.

Several optical tricks were used to make the house appear larger. Ceilings are 10 feet high and door openings and halls are all oversize. Almost 100% glass walls toward garden also aid the effect of spaciousness.

Marx is an old friend of the LeRoys and understood that wh they really wanted were the conveniences and practicality of on floor apartment-style living plus the external beauties of natu Therefore, he set about building a three-bedroom house that hu the contours of a gentle knoll of ground. He planned all t rooms so that each opens onto the outside through sliding gla doors from one or two sides.

In the case of the master suite (not shown) he gave Mrs. LeR the choice view because she spends more time at home than h husband. He also erected a curtained glass partition betwe their two bedrooms so that during the day the draperies could drawn open and both owners might share the southwesterly orie tation and the view of the patio garden. A complete movie projection system is skillfully tucked into the LeRoy living room. An electrically operated CinemaScope-size screen rolls down out of an acoustic-plaster ceiling. Loudspeakers are incorporated in the grilled bases of lamp tables on either side of sofa, placing binaural sound properly.

The lens openings are covered most of the time by a pair of handsome paintings, which push aside on metal tracks. Projection room is completely soundproof and fireproof, and is equipped with full professional equipment. Whole system can come into action at moment's notice, without causing disarray.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Furnishing of living room has a nice blend of hominess and formality, making it equally suitable to be used by a few or by forty. Secret lies in the generous, but not too-generous scaling of furniture, ceiling height, wall and window proportions and in the detailing. This room is worthy of close study and analysis.

Fireplace wall backs up to wall of entrance hall, shown on front cover. Here, as elsewhere in the house, the LeRoys have used pretty things, and have not stayed in the narrow, cultistic definition of what is modern. Rich materials, like Kapashell and deep-pile Bigelow-Sanford carpeting are used lavishly.

For a conscientious architect like Marx, the LeRoys' way of life posed other problems.

Mervyn LeRoy is a well-known motion picture producer and director. For his work and peace of mind a movie room is absolutely indispensable. He needs it for film editing, for running screen tests of new talent, for viewing the competition's screen product, and for viewing his own work.

Had he been building a home twenty-five years ago, he would have undoubtedly asked for a private theater complete with film vaults, projection room, re-t rooms and fifty seats. But with the two-fold objective of utilizing every foot of space and making most of the rooms answer two or more needs, he realized that a separate movie room would be a needless extravagance.

Mr. Marx accordingly worked things out so that the 35mm projection equipment is housed in a small, soundproof area between the living room and the library. The living room then doubles as the home theatre. The lens-openings are deftly camouflaged behind two paintings, while an electrically-operated Cinemascope-size screen rolls down from the acoustic ceiling. Loudspeakers are incorporated in two lamp tables, and the abundance of soft fabrics in the room provides enough absorption for excellent acoustical results.

In planning the LeRoy house, Mr. Marx was also confronted with the major problem of guest-space. The LeRoys have four grown children (two married) who come home for occasional visits. One guest room was barely (Please turn to page 270)

Housing of TV, radio and record player is done in a custom cabinet opposite sofa. Whole wall composes nicely.

Mercury Climbs Over 100 Again

Dallas temperatures were on an upward surge again Thursday and the mercury rose to 101 degrees at 2:42 p.m., the highest temperature since Aug. 16 when 102 degrees was recorded.

Thursday's high reading brought the number of days this year with readings of 100 or more to forty-three, five days over the old mark of thirty-eight, set in 1952.

Forecast for Friday is fair and warm with a high around 100 degrees.

green and lush

1 Shade from well-established trees protects lawn grass from burning sun. Grass is St. Augustine, a tough, heat-tolerant species. It is fed heavily and often to compensate for competition from tree roots.

2 Areas subject to heavy foot traffic are paved interestingly. Bricked area here is both path and play yard off the boys' bedroom.

3 Lawn and shrubs receive only the small quota of watering allowed under Dallas's rigid rationing, but look lush. Flowers are on north or west sides of fences, so they escape much unnecessary sun heat.

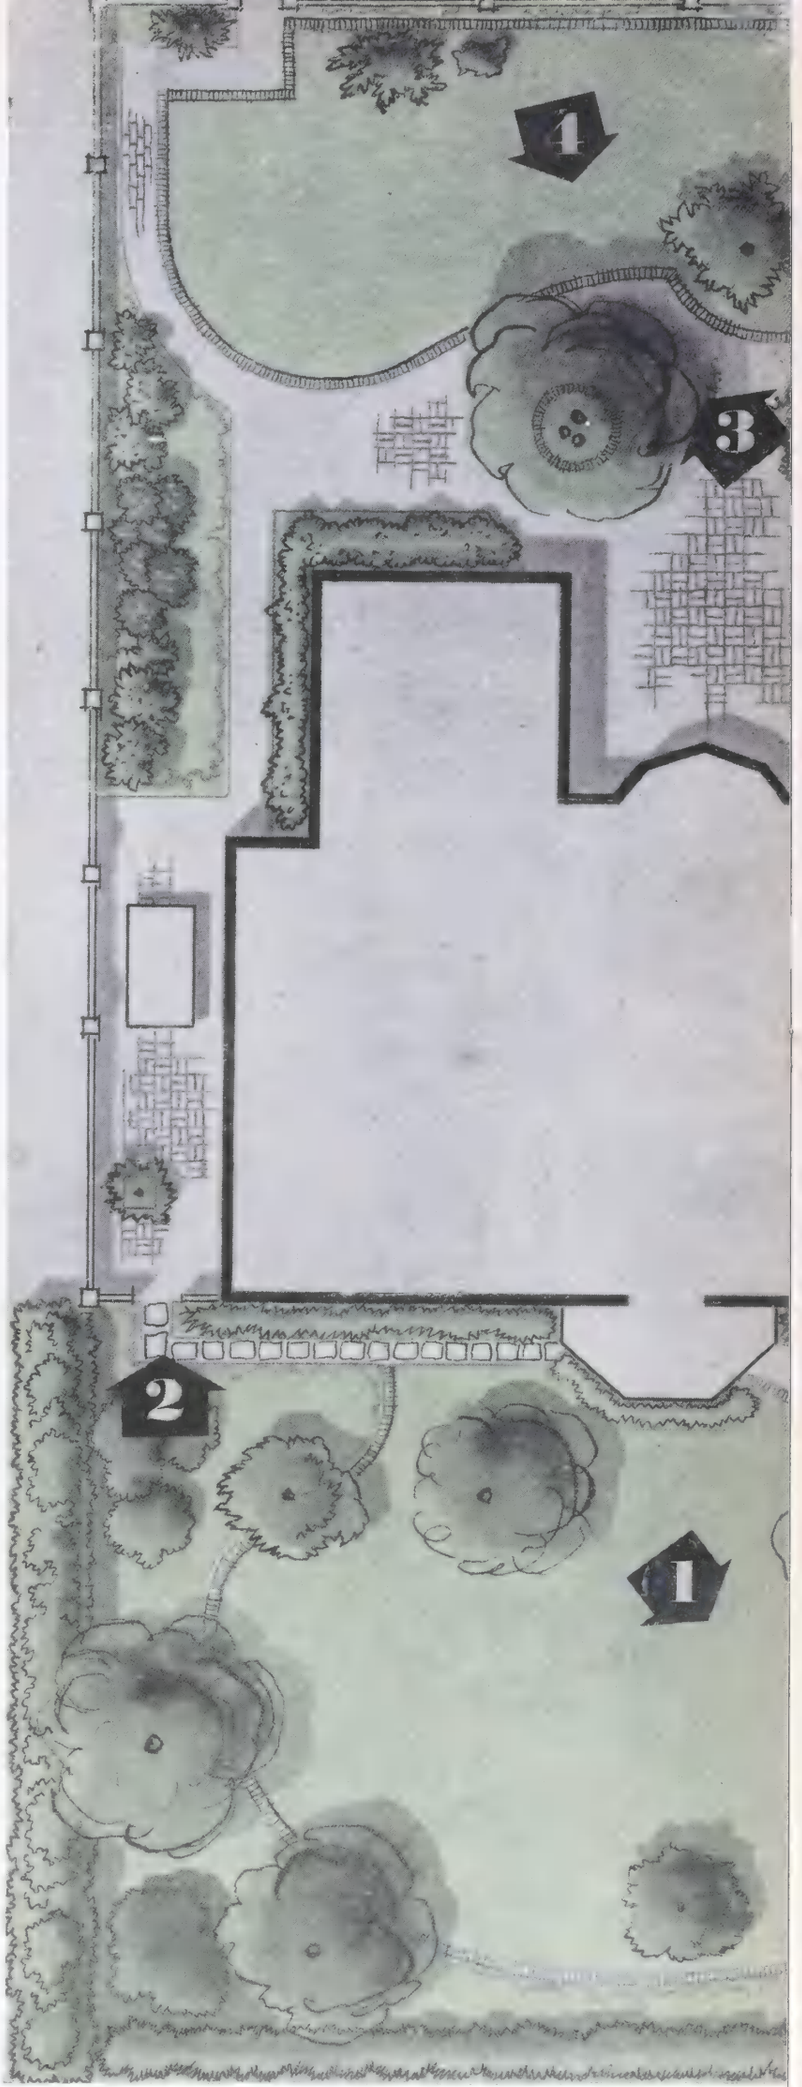
By Dr. JOSEPH E. HOWLAND

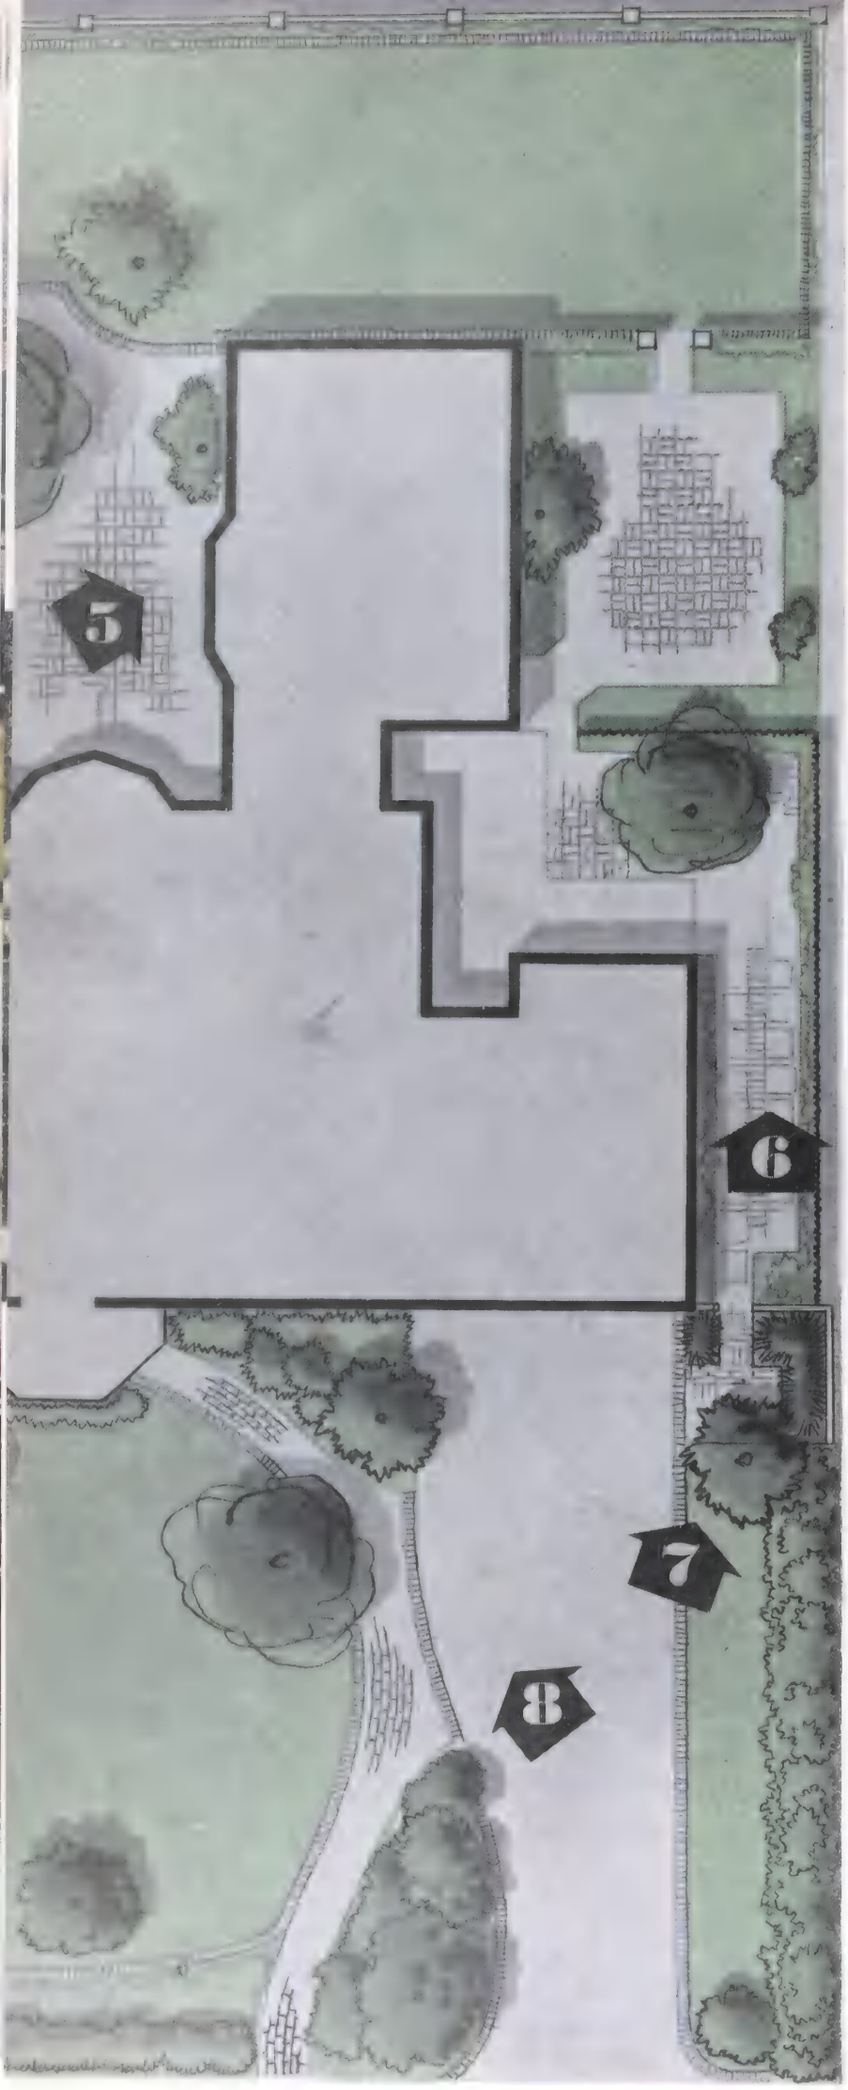
These photographs were made in Dallas, Texas, in late June, 1953, on a day when the thermometer read 105°. The temperature had been around the 100° mark for three weeks. Why then hasn't this garden been burned up?



Shade—no direct sunlight anywhere for more than one hour or so a day—is the answer.

Shade is indispensable in 100° weather, as much so for plants as for man. No amount of watering can make up for the lack of shade. Roots just can't absorb water as fast as the heat evaporates it from the leaves. They wilt and the plants look tired and droopy in the landscape.

More than this, in the Dallas area the sunlight on a 100° day is so bright that it solarizes the leaves of most plants, bringing the normal food-making machinery of the leaves to a halt. In effect the plant starves, adding to its moisture-shortage troubles from the excessive heat.



How then do shade trees survive? Their sheer mass stands them in good stead. Their upper leaves do wilt and do solarize. But the shaded leaves below are protected, so function normally. And of course the (Please turn the page) roots of a big tree go deep into the soil, roaming widely and drawing water up from a vast territory which smaller plants can't reach. Young trees, though, must be watered and fed generously to help compensate for their smaller root spread and their inability to provide self-shading. Under severe conditions it may be wise to protect them, at least for the first year or two by erecting an overhead screen or trellis.

Fifteen years ago the Pace "garden" was a flat, treeless city lot. Landscape architect Arthur Berger recommended that young trees be planted at once but that the garden itself be delayed until the trees were established enough to provide "no area receiving direct sunlight for more than one hour a day," as he put it.

Big trees could have been moved in, of course. But they would have suffered severely for a number of years. It is axiomatic that any new garden will suffer terribly. Don't expect any garden to look lush and green until it is shaded and the plants are established.

Patience thus is Number 2 ingredient in garden-building in a hot-climate. The Paces planted their trees 15 years ago. They started a lawn, too, of course, and planted some shrubs. But only the trees were to be permanent.

Seven years ago the shade was adequate to start the garden we show. Today the Pace garden is a model of the stylish, lush garden possible in a 100° area (43 days 100° or hotter—one 111° day—occurred this summer in Dallas).

Water was rationed strictly again this year but the Pace garden seems unaffected by the heat and drought. It was the greenest garden we saw in town that 105° day on which we photographed.

The Paces, including the two teen-age sons, are excellent gardeners. They do water when (Please turn to page 335)

6 Service yard and its pavings aren't slighted in this garden, but are just as thoughtfully designed as any other part of the garden.

7 Visitors arriving by car or on foot see this attractive corner planting, seldom guess it shuts off the service yard. Vine on wall is ivy, pruned to keep it to the hidden pattern wires.

8 The welcome shade everywhere helps banish glare that can make even healthy plants look hot and tired. Pace garden is basically a "green garden," but flowers are tucked in everywhere, always protected, though, from exposure to direct sun heat overhead.

Thought-built Gifts for the Modern Epicure

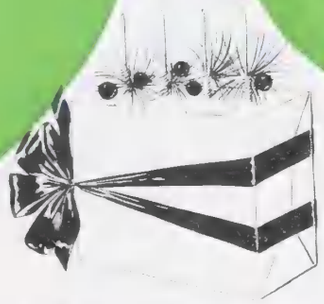
For the knowing connoisseur



A bottle of Piper Heidsieck imported Champagne, two bottles of Guinness Stout—just the right proportions to chill, mix and make lush Lillian Russell Black Velvets. Include directions: Always pour champagne into stout, never vice versa.

For the gourmet with a sense of theater

All the wherewithal for the classic conversation piece—crêpes suzettes. Copper crêpe pan from Bloomingdale's sets on hoops of brass over a gleaming sphere that holds the Sterno. Send the cognac and Cointreau needed for a savory fire. Send crêpes, too, rolled (by Roart) in a jar.

When you'd like to send all the stars in the sky

Give The Art of Eating, the collected works of M. F. K. Fisher (World Publishing Co., $6). Full of love—love of food, wine and bewitchment. There is lavish praise of the kind of martini (wondrous, dry and delicate) that can be made from Blonde Dubonnet and Gordon's London Gin.

Instead of a one-sided gift, something that suggests either the giver or the receiver but not both, why not do something different? Offer a gift that is a bond between you, a new experience, a new discovery for both of you to share? Offer a gift with the thought of you both built-in.

Don't just send a coffee-maker or even champagne—send a joint experience, one that renews the sense of a living relationship between you and your friend or your family. With the coffee-maker send a new kind of coffee you've just discovered. Add the cups that a coffee lover alone appreciates. With the champagne send some stout, if you've had the wonderful sensation of a "Black Velvet." Package them in the same spirit. Wrap the canter of coffee-makings in café au lait (an elaborate way to say brown) wrapping paper with a glued-tight spatter of whole coffee beans and a chou of glittering cellophane ribbons.

All this will personalize your present as no initial or monogram can—and your gift will be shared by both of you. (Please turn to page 266)

or how to have a big living room in a tiny house

You might call this a two-room house: living room and kitchen. Yet there is ample space for dining and sleeping, thanks to one of the most ingenious solutions to the problem we've ever seen: How to get a lot of living from a very small house.

It was achieved by creating a spacious 22′ by 35′ living room which serves both living and dining without any feeling whatever of being cramped. For sleeping, owner and decorator George Hall devised two alcoves off one end of the living room. They are hidden behind handsome sliding doors that pass as panels in the wood-paneled wall. Open the doors and you have two bedrooms.

Here are all the advantages of borrowing living space from bedrooms that are only slightly used without the disadvantages of eliminating bedrooms entirely. Thus, upon rising in the morning, one can close the doors upon the alcoves, and the living room presents a completely orderly appearance. And whether you seek a retreat for a nap or because of sickness, you can withdraw from the living room into the privacy of either of the two small alcoves.

Despite the smallness of this house, so suitable as a retirement house too, there is no lack of storage or dressing space. The master bath is a large combination dressing-room and bathroom with one full wall of closets. The bedroom alcoves have one wall of wardrobes from floor to ceiling with access from either side. Still more storage closets are built into the garage (not shown) for less often used possessions. (A guest house, also not shown, built across the back of the property, takes care of either overnight guests or the sons when they are at home.)

Everything contributes to a feeling of luxurious spaciousness: ceiling height, boldness in decorating and avoidance of overdecorating, the philosophy of having fewer rooms but making them larger rooms, and most of all the very clever case of the vanishing bedrooms.

It turns inward upon a garden court in the style of the Chinese house, but this is also a developing tendency in some of our finest modern American homes.

It is adapted to the needs of its owners and to the character of its site on which garden and house are settled like a green oasis in a mountainous desert.

Here is the story of a house that was built around one's most loved possessions

AMERICAN HOUSE WITH CHINESE DETAILS

The Chinese art and furnishings are handled with ease, familiarity and affectionate understanding. They are not an alien presence, thanks to the sympathetic architecture.

American technology is wedded here to Chinese craftsmanship as is evidenced by this concrete fence, cast in our best manner and detailed like Chinese-carved wood.

Albert Ely Ives, architect
Daphne Damon, owner

The truth and beauty of a fundamental principle is brought home to us again and again: When you build and furnish a house for yourself, start first of all with yourself. Determine what you really want, the way you actually want to live in the privacy of your own home. Then build accordingly, and you will build truly and beautifully.

The house on these three pages illustrates this principle. It was built for the owner, Miss Daphne Damon and her sister. They were both raised in a charming Chinese house, richly decorated and furnished in the Chinese manner. When the time came for them to build a home of their own, they selected the simpler pieces from the furniture and accessories that they had inherited—a great deal of it they found to be too elegant for use—and had their architect design a house in which they and their favorite possessions could be accommodated in keeping with their wants, needs and the character of their possessions.

Architect Albert Ely Ives proceeded to present Miss Damon and her sister with an American house with slight Chinese details influencing the design. A simple background in the more or less public rooms, such as the lanai, the living and dining rooms, was decided upon to go with the furniture. There was added also a slight Japanese touch with shoji and fusuma screens that set off their fine Japanese things that accord so well with their other furnishings.

Despite these details, the house as a whole is American. Not merely because it is the Honolulu home of Americans and designed by an American, (Please turn the page)

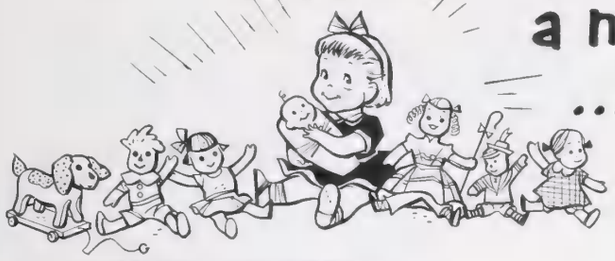
The open plan for the public rooms is more Japanese than American than Chinese. But the way the house turns around a court is Chinese, nor is it American just because the bedrooms, kitchen and garage (not shown) are wholly so. It is in the whole conception, the technology of the cast-coral-stone fence and bases of the pillars, for instance, despite their Chinese-like detailing, the concern for comfort and function in 20th-century terms, the free adaptation rather than strictly traditional handling of various elements, structural and decorative, to the particular purposes of this house that make it American.



It is a fine example of how you can make all things your own—whether Oriental, European, American or primitive—by understanding and appreciating them for what they are. The Chinese furniture, like the Chinese roof and grillework, are not foreign to this house or ill at ease in it, so often the case with Oriental things bought with affectation rather than with affection and insight.

They make good sense wherever you see them here, because both owner and architect understand what it is that gives them their quality. The grillework is for shadow pattern; the Chinese chairs are for seating; the shoji for opening or closing off a room—and they are so used. Only when such things are divorced from their purpose do they become superficial and slightly ridiculous.

As the interest in things Oriental, particularly Japanese, once again grows in our country to the proportions of a craze, it might be well to reflect (Please turn to page 312)

Are you RADIO-active?

By ABRAM CHASINS

Here is a plea to express yourself. Tell the radio stations what you like and what you don't like. It's from the Music Director of the largest station devoted to good music, WQXR, New York City

How many times, while listening to your radio, have you had the impulse to talk back to the loudspeaker? To say, perhaps, "Oh, enough! That's terrible." Or, "My, but that's magnificent!" I'll wager that you've said one or both of these things frequently, but how many times have you taken the trouble to translate these reactions into the only method of informing us, the broadcasters, so that we'll know what you're thinking? Few times, if ever, is my bet.

No one thinks of himself as a member of the public, and in the minds of most people, particularly those with a high I.Q., it's the public, "not I," who writes to radio stations.

At WQXR, it's the job of a large program committee to devise nineteen hours a day of adult musical entertainment and information every day. In planning the music (about 85% of our schedule) we are faced with the problem of tempering our personal musical ideas and tastes with whatever real information we can get about our listeners.

The fan mail and pan mail are the liveliest clues to this information. Here's a sample of what crossed this music director's desk one recent morning.

Letter number 1: "Why do you give us stuff like Rossini's Barber of Seville when there are truly great operas by Wagner?"

Letter number 2: "You insult our intelligence when you play modern music. Even musicians laugh at it. Why don't you stick to the great music of the past?"

Letter number 3: "If you have any sense of musical vision, how can you sink to broadcasting so much 'sure-fire' hackneyed repertory of Brahms, Chopin, Tchaikovsky, et al? Instead of bringing people up to new music, you ram the rancid sugar-water of the so-called classics down their throats. Don't you know that there is a world of modern, unheard compositions that is far better than the familiar ear-ticklers? Where do you stand?"

These are fair samples of the type of letter which bring my ambivalence right to the surface. The writers were sufficiently stirred to feel intensely and to communicate their reactions to us. For that one must be grateful. But they nullify the chance to be constructive because their comments are too lopsided to be helpful. The mail contained more of same, and even some letters of praise. I have often wished that we could indulge in the soul-satisfying luxury of intemperate replies to the unreasonable kickers. But now I have an opportunity and hereby confess openly some mentally-composed-but-never-mailed answers, and a few questions of my own.

To our Wagnerite I'd say, "I'm really sorry for you, my limited friend. Your love for the marvelous music-dramas of Wagner has obviously deafened you to the charm and gaiety of one of the most admirable and high-spirited comic-operas ever written. The more we love music, the more music will we love. As to your complaint that we broadcast Rossini instead of Wagner that particular evening, that's like griping to your wife, 'Why do you give me tomato soup when we could have chicken soup?' Any jury would acquit her for applying a rolling pin as she answered, 'We had chicken soup yesterday.'" (Please turn the page)

Our anti-modernist should be told that in every age it has taken a lot of music, mostly bad and mediocre, for the great stuff finally to emerge. We must have an opportunity to hear it in order to allow and to aid the necessary process of public selection and rejection to function. I would add, "Your statement that even musicians laugh at modern music is hardly a fact. Musicians do a lot of laughing, but not at music they haven't heard. If music gives you pleasure and inspiration, then you owe something to music. It is up to you to keep it a vital and growing art. You should be willing to hear at least once what a composer has to say, no matter how painful.

TO the correspondent who uses the classics as a simile for rancid sugar-water, I have this to say. "It is certainly true that the standard classic and romantic literature is, and perhaps will always be, the basis for most of the programs of the concert halls and of a radio station specializing in music. Any organization servicing a large music-loving public would be failing miserably in its obligations if it did not fully present the greatest compositions of the past. Surely you must realize that it is impossible to please all listeners simultaneously. We include contemporary music in far greater proportion to any known demand for it because we understand music to be a living art, and not because we think Brahms is a poor composer.

"In every age, only a small fraction of the total artistic production has survived. Most of it was junk. And lots of the junk resulted from that myopic rejection of the past which your letter reflects."

The basic responsibility of a radio station which concentrates heavily on good music programs is to provide its public with the kind of entertainment the program-planners think it wants and the kind which that public has shown it wants. Now, there is more than one public. There are many, with minority and majority interests and rights. In line with some bright Frenchman's remark that "We must be very careful what we want in life because we're most likely to get it," it is my guess that our public is getting the radio fare it wants and in very close relation to its proportionate desires. Sadly, it appears to be the most intelligent segment which least makes its sincere reactions known.

Being an above-average listener requires a certain alertness. It is like being a good reader who knows his way around a library. He knows that in its bewildering variety, there are treasurable experiences awaiting him. Also, he knows that there are lots and lots of other volumes which, however fascinating to someone else, have no interest for him.

Right now, an army of efficient investigators is probing thousands of homes all over the nation gathering statistics on who's listening to what. Listener surveys (broadcasters refer to them as "numbers with a built-in ulcer") are not claimed to belong to the exact sciences, but they are unquestionably revealing and significant to radio stations and sponsors alike.

They tabulate those who listen to radio as well as to television. The housewife who has to be all over her home, the autoists, shopkeepers, students who work to a musical background—all depend upon radio. For the music-lover, there is no contest between radio and TV: radio is a way of life.

PERHAPS by this time you're talking back to this printed page and saying: "That's all very well for WQXR, where more musical masterpieces are broadcast daily than the wildest music-lover could absorb without getting a bad case of aural indigestion, but what about my town? Our local station's idea of servicing the music public is an occasional Victor Herbert operetta." All right. Let me ask you a few questions. Are there a considerable number of people in your town who would respond to good music radio programs? Do they spend money on musical events in your locality? Do they buy products? If your answers are "yes," I can only say that any station management which would ignore a reasonably sizable group of neighbors who love music and subscribe to concerts at a comparatively high cost annually, is either asleep or just plumb crazy.

A few minutes of your time at the price of a postage stamp should easily convince your radio station that your numbers, your enthusiastic support and your buying power justify a generous piece of radio time devoted to your specific interests. If your group is sufficiently large, even sponsors will be eager to provide for its musical needs.

The Friendship of Music

The long road to chamber music—better called living-room music—is one of the most significant and pleasurable ever taken by man. And it leads to friendship with the great composers

By JOSEPH A. BARRY

Chamber music, like friendship, is not to be hurried. It is not to be met running. You must let it come at its own pace and in its own time. It will surprise you with miracles only if you ask no miracles of it.

For some time this listener has been playing the sixteen Beethoven String Quartets—the life blood of a master spirit—as recorded for Columbia by the Budapest Quartet and more recently for the Haydn Society by the Vegh Quartet. He has also been listening to Victor's Paganini Quartet and Westminster's Barylli Quartet—neither of which, alas, has performed the full Beethoven series for the record-purchaser.

The quartets of Beethoven are not easily possessed; certainly not the string quartets of his last great period. Musicologists refer to them as the least "accessible" of his work. It might be preferable to say that access to them is not immediate for all but a happy few. It comes with a long time of listening as well as a lifetime of living. Trite and repeated as this notion may be, it is remarkably true in the case of the quartet in C sharp minor.

However, it is richly worth the effort. In this connection one can hardly do better than quote from Sullivan's magistral book on Beethoven—a book that illuminates not only Beethoven's musical but his spiritual development as well. The quality of Beethoven's quartet and the quality of Sullivan's vision are equally revealed in this long (and slightly condensed) passage:

"The quartet in C sharp minor is the greatest of Beethoven's quartets, as he himself thought . . . The opening fugue is the most superhuman piece of music that Beethoven has ever written. It has that serenity which, as Wagner said, speaking of these quartets, passes beyond beauty. Nowhere else in music are we made so aware, as here, of a state of consciousness surpassing our own, where our problems do not exist. Those faint and troubling intimations we sometimes have of a vision different from any yet including our own, of a way of apprehending life, passionless, perfect and complete, that resolves all our discords, are here presented with the reality they had glimpsed.

"This impression of a superhuman knowledge, of a superhuman life being slowly frozen into shape, as it were, before our eyes, can be ambiguous. That passionless, remote calm can seem, as it did to Wagner, like a melancholy too profound for any tears. To Berlioz it was terrifying. To Beethoven himself it was the justification of, and the key to, life.

"In the light of this vision he surveys the world. That this vision was permanent with Beethoven is inconceivable. No man ever lived who could maintain such a state of illumination. This, we may be sure, is the last and greatest of Beethoven's spiritual discoveries, only to be grasped in the moments of his profoundest abstraction from the world. But it was sufficiently permanent to enable him to write the C sharp minor quartet in the light of it, a feat of concentration, of abstraction, of utter truthfulness, that is without equal."

No wonder Sullivan titles his book "Beethoven: His Spiritual Development." It can be argued—as it is argued—that music can be superb without being called spiritual; that it can be expressive without expressing anything but musical ideas. This is a notion, however, that tends to run dry; that tends to remove emotion because it is afraid of sentimentality; that equates music with mathematics and conceives its heart to be a metronome; that plays Bach with the regularity of an electric sewing machine. Avoiding the Charybdis of sentiment, it runs high and dry on the Scylla of critical purity. But it can also be said, in its defense, that only from that height can one survey all the universe and be untouched by it. To be untouched, however, is to be unwarmed, and the height offers cold comfort.

OF ALL the complete recordings of Beethoven's string quartets, in the opinion of this reviewer, the Budapest Quartet most adequately offers the listener the same vision as Sullivan's. The technique is as perfect as the purest of purists would demand and is yet subservient to an interpretation as delicate, shapely and soaring as the most sensible of sensibilities might request. Possibly the beautifully recorded tone of the Vegh Quartet—whose musicianship is unquestionable—might appeal more to other listeners and sound better on their phonographic equipment. In any event, credit the Haydn Society for this new Vegh recording of all Beethoven's string quartets.

Credit the Haydn Society too with the ambitious, exciting task, already half accomplished, of recording all the Haydn quartets, perhaps with Mozart's the most "accessible" and readily enjoyable chamber music ever written. As played by the new Schneider Quartet, it fills the living room with gaiety and rhythm, melody and musical intimacy that not too long ago only nobility commanded for its salons. If chamber music hasn't as yet opened its doors for your entrance, try Haydn's Quartet in F, Op. 3, No. 5; or Mozart's No. 15 in D. K. 421. (There's a fine sampling of both of these, and many more, in Victor's Heart of the String Quartet as played by the Paganini group.)

Consider, too, the Quartetto Italiano. Virgil Thomson has gone so far as to call this ensemble "the finest string quartet, unquestionably, that our century has known." As one of the finest musical critics that our country has known, Mr. Thomson's high regard for Angel Record's foursome is, unquestionably, one to test for oneself. In its performance of Debussy's beautiful Quartet for Strings in G, Opus 10, the Quartetto Italiano meets the test admirably. It has the lightness and strength, the lacy and structural tension of the Eiffel Tower, which one might call frozen music or Debussy-in-steel. The Mozart and Boccherini quartets performed by the Quartetto Italiano are equally charming.

You should not let the sun rise too many times before you hear Columbia's recording of Dvorak's Quintet in A with Clifford Curzon at the piano and the Budapest Quartet at the strings. It should convert you, single-handed and forever, to chamber music. If it doesn't, Epic's new recording of Schubert's Quintet in A for Piano and Strings, called "The Trout," might do it. More "inaccessible" but ultimately as enjoyable are Haydn's Trios for piano, violin and cello, Nos. 4, 17, 27, and 29 (Westminster) with Badura-Skoda, Fournier and Janigro. Best-known and most-played of Brahms' chamber music is his Quintet in F; try either the Columbia recording with Curzon or Westminster's with Demus.

WHO knows? Who can be sure what can best introduce one to the private world of chamber music? It might even be Cook's splendid recording of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 which will pave the way to the other five concertos, as well as to the rest of the richness of what should no longer be called chamber music, but rather living-room music. Whatever it is that opens the way, the long road to this music is one of the most significant and pleasurable ever taken by man. And when you are on it, you will never be alone. You will always be accompanied by magnificent music by Beethoven and Mozart, Haydn, Bach and Schubert.

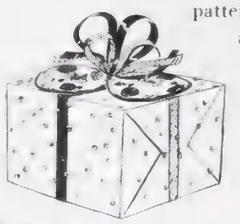
THOUGHT-BUILT GIFTS FOR THE MODERN EPICURE



If you two have seen Paris together

Did you know that you can air-mail-order direct from Paris incredibly good confections from all the provinces? Write Specialités de France, 44 Avenue Montaigne. Coeur à la crême basket gloriously filled, 3,000 francs (about $8.50); Michelin trunk, 4,500 francs, postage about 1,000 francs. No customs worry if it's labeled GIFT.

Heat-brave "china" and sequinned holders

A gift nobody ever gave—or got—before. They're that new! The Trio pattern, Franciscan Ware, and for handling those piping-hot dishes at the table, Victorian-chintz pot holders from Lord & Taylor—avec sequins, no less! Tie the holders on the package.

Your gift will be wrapped or packaged as thoughtfully as it is chosen. The champagne and stout that make a "Black Velvet" (see page 250), suggest their own wrappings—bows on each bottle and the three tied together in a champagne-colored bag bound with black velvet.

Crêpes suzette pan, the requisite bottles and the full jar will go into a sturdy wooden box made bright with wide orange ribbons. A cluster of oranges, real or dime store, will be wired in place with florist's wire and entwined with shiny leaves.

For the fabulous Fisher book and martini makings, let's hope you'll find a way to make a personal presentation in a box hugely bowed and beribboned, with candles set into holders made from spiraled pipe cleaners. Candles lighted!

Throw in the Towel

Gourmet tea towels designed by Tammis Keefe inspire many a thought-built gift. There is the Strasbourg pâté de foie gras to wrap in a towel adorned with a Strasbourg goose (illustrated on page 269). You can find these and a bevy of others also at Lord & Taylor in New York and in many fine stores and gift shops all over the country.

A French-dressing towel pictures the Eiffel Tower along with a good classic recipe. Use it to enwrap a double-necked bottle filled, if you will, with wine or herb vinegar and a most excellent oil. Or send your favorite spiced vinegar and perhaps a jug of walnut oil.

Six favorite herbs: chervil, dill, oregano, marjoram, thyme and sage might be sent in a small spice shelf sewed with yarn into a Tammis Keefe tea towel that pictures those herbs and lists their uses.

A meat thermometer will go from me to some of those friends with whom I've had the most violent arguments about whether to thaw or not to thaw meat before cooking (see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, September, 1954). And with it, of course, I'll send the towel which gives a time chart for meats of all types, unfrozen.

A bottle of that lovely wine you've shared together fits right into the design of the wine towel listing various types of wines and what to serve with them.

There is a barbecue towel starring the various meat animals and dividing them into butcher-shop cuts. A fine gift to send along with a jar of your favorite homemade or store-bought barbecue sauce and a really long-handled paint brush, at least an inch wide for brushing the meat as it grills. This type of brush hasn't found its way yet into the gourmet departments, but you can get it easily at any hardware shop. (The usual pastry brush is no earthly good.)

A bar towel pictures all sorts of drinks including the Stinger, made of equal parts white or green crème de menthe and brandy well iced. Fun to send along with the ingredients.

Nostalgic is the candy jar to match the pretty one on the tea towel. Fill it with rock candy crystals, white and brown. You will find those at Trinacria on Third Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, New York City. Then a bottle of fine Old Overholt Rye Whisky to make a comforting rock and rye—in case of colds.

Cookbooks Plus

The cookbook shelves are full of ideas for interesting gifts:

Imagine the delight of receiving a Westinghouse automatic deep-fat fryer-cooker, so good-looking that it can come graciously to the table. And that's not all. Send the new Electric Fryer-Cooker Recipes by Julia Kiene which explores the many possibilities of that most versatile appliance. (M. Barrows.)

For the Solid Gold Cadillac type of person with a flare for beautiful food and drink, a solid gold—ah well, gleaming brass—or you might choose a copper-colored Waring Blendor. Then to make sure that everyone gets all possible use of it, send the Electric Blender Recipes by Mabel Stegner. (M. Barrows.)

A fancier of exotic dishes would be enchanted by a recent book published by Arco Publishers Limited, London, distributed in U.S. through the British Book Center, New York. Indian Cookery by E. P. Veerasawmy. "The world's foremost Indian chef . . .; authentic and simple . . .: a definitive edition . . .; unique cookery classic . . .: the only authoritative work in the English language." These are quotes from the blurb. Try as we might, we simply can't argue. So that no time may be lost trying out the recipes, include a package of Madras Curry. It comes in a shocking-pink wrapper printed all over like the Police Gazette. You will find it at Fraser Morris, 872 Madison Ave., N.Y.C.

Dinners That Wait (Doubleday), a most usable cookbook by Betty Wason, ex-foreign correspondent, ex-copy writer, excellent hostess. To help her fine dinners-to-wait, what could be better than a pair of small Hotrays by Salton—one to set at each end of the buffet table. All Hotray owners become addicts and wonder how they ever lived without them.

If soufflés intrigue them, send the new soufflé cookbook, Serve At Once by Myra Waldo (Thomas Y. Crowell) and a soufflé dish of the classic type, straight sided, white and fluted.

Edible and . . .

Something to eat is never amiss, especially when it's accompanied appropriately, as for instance:

Elegant, small sardines (a tin or two or four or six) from the fjords of Norway available at any good delicatessen or grocery store. To go along—a stainless-steel sardine can opener and server from England by way of Caviarteria, New York City.

A dozen eggs from your own hens and a tiny timer which can also be used for timing telephone calls. Or maybe an automatic electric egg cooker. Sunbeam's is wonderful!

A dozen Persian limes or extra special lemons and a little lemon squeezer in the shape of a bird. You will run across it at many gift shops.

A beautiful Brie cheese and an antique cheese server from Soupçon, New York.

King-size supply of Brownies complete with the new Betty Crocker Brownie Mix, a tin of Blue Diamond Walnuts and an appropriate confession about your famous Brownie recipe.

Homemade ice cream packed with new Mystic-Ice in an insulated freezer bag. Those ice packs are as chilling as dry ice, easy to handle and can be refrozen over and over again.

Exquisite tea and a gallon of spring water, non-sparkling, of course, for someone who lives in a hard water area and finds it difficult to brew the more flowery and delicate teas.

Fine mustards—Dijon mustard in that characteristic little blue and white jar; champagne mustard in a miniature champagne bottle; white wine mustard in a jar that looks like a mushroom; Bahamian mustard, biting-strong, all set on a small tray that stands on a Susanette which transforms any tray into a lazy susan. Shops all over the country have all these items.

Stone-ground flours and a handmade trencher which serves equally well as dough bowl or salad bowl.

A slab of smoky, home-cured bacon set on an Adams' cutting board, magnetized to hold its knife. The stone-ground flour, trencher, bacon, knife and board can all be ordered from Great Valley Mills, Ivyland, Pennsylvania.

For the lobster lover, a paid-up order for a clam bake and lobster feast (eight lively lobsters and a half peck of steamer clams), to arrive on any desired date from Saltwater Farms, Damariscotta, Maine. And along with this a sturdy canvas bag—a lobster rampant upon it. The bag filled with eight bibs, an apron and a set of the most thoroughly practical lobster shears and forks.

(There will be more "Thought-built Gifts" next month.)

So you send a tin of the longest, plumpest, snowiest stalks from Holland (via Vendome)—a set of antique Majolica asparagus plates and holders reproduced from a rare original by Carole Stupell. The box decorated with asparagus fern.

For an orchidaceous lady who can cook

A spray of exquisite cymbidium orchids from your local florist and another member of the orchid family, a richly redolent Mexican vanilla bean put up in a glass tube by Spice Islands and transformed by you into an arrow or Christmas cane to adorn the clear plastic box.

adequate. What to do about it?

Without adding to the number of bedrooms, the architect arranged the library so that it can serve as a temporary guest suite. "Modernfold" doors separate the library from the hall and once the doors are closed, the room becomes a private apartment complete with lavatory, day bed and closets.

The pavilion is also used as a guest wing. Planned originally as a workroom for Mr. LeRoy, it is equipped with box springs and mattresses and contains the dressing rooms for the swimming pool; thus it now serves three separate purposes.

Social life being what it is in the film colony, the LeRoys entertain a great deal. At least once a week they give a party for 15 or 20 guests in the rich setting of their dining room, two walls of which are constructed entirely of glass and the other two finished in beautiful Kapashell. Dining room (shown above) overlooks the swimming pool shown on page 241 and the interior courtyard garden.

Since a bar is a necessary adjunct to most parties, but since Mrs. LeRoy hates bars "especially after a party," Mr. Marx designed an inoffensive bar which he tucked into the passageway between the front entrance and the dining room. The bar cannot be seen from either point. When viewed from the living room, the line of the serving counter flows at the same height as the fireplace mantel and merges with it visually.

As an architect, Mr. Marx is artistic as well as practical, and on most of his jobs he makes it a point to design the furnishings as well as the architecture, a practise that lends itself to unity, harmony and integration.

Architecturally his work is simple and unadorned, but he knows how to exploit the richness of materials in furnishings. This virtue is particularly apparent in the interiors of the LeRoy house.

For example, the entrance hall features a warm-colored Martta Taipale tapestry glistening with metallic threads, hanging against the dull, rough finish of a flagstone wall.

In the living room Tang and Han figures are placed beside such modern materials as bleached cork and Lucite surfaces. And no matter how vivid the contrast, it is never jarring because there is a unity that ties the furnishings together. The tortoise-shell finish on the pedestals of a plate-glass coffee table is repeated on the frames of two traditional chairs and two lamp shades. Similarly, the bamboo pattern on the couches blend with the Chinese art objects and the split bamboo of the vertical shades.

The dominant theme of the Mervyn LeRoy house is quality. And it is the people who plan and build and furnish such homes who are today responsible for changing the American standard of home appreciation from sheer size to the more subtle criteria of beauty, form and livability.

The dining room (above) of the Mervyn LeRoy house looks down the length of an interior courtyard garden (below) and borrows sunny spaciousness from it. Here is a spot protected from wind and intrusion, planted in particularly fine style with a terrace easily reached and handsomely paved with slices of variously sized logs.
